JAPAN SPURNS PROPOSALS OF LYTTON GROUP

Manchukuo Case Declared Like Panama.

DAVIS VISITS TOKYO ENVOY

Boycott by Chinese Is Likely Big Issue at Geneva.

Tokyo, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Japan's reply to the Lytton commission's report on the Manchurian problem, which is to be made public Monday in Geneva, emphatically rejects the commission's proposal that Chinese sovereignty be restored in Manchuria with a provision for some form of international cooperation for the solution of the entire Far Eastern question.

From an official source it was learned today that Japan considers this proposal incompatible with the independence of the State of Manchukuo, which was established with the assistance of the Tokyo government to rule over Manchuria. Japan stands immovable on the policy of Manchukuo's independence, it was said.

Case of Panama Cited.

The Tokyo government will remind the Council of the League of Nations, which is to consider the report of the Lytton Commission—a league investigation body—at its session next week, that Manchukuo is not the first state separated from its parent nation and accorded independence through the action of another power.

"I can not affirm," said an official spokesman, "the assertions in vernacular newspapers that our reply to the Lytton report will cite Panama and Estonia in this connection, but certainly Panama is one of the incidents we had in mind. I can assure you, however, this portion of the document is in no wise construable as derogatory to the United States."

Counterfeit Plot Is Laid to Texans

Ft. Worth Quartet Accused of Planning to Pass Bogus Currency.

Fort Worth, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—An alleged scheme to dispose of counterfeit currency was described by Secret Service operatives today at the preliminary examination of four defendants on conspiracy charges.

The defendants—E. S. Allen, Fort Worth attorney; Charley H. Clark, oil lease man; Edward A. Griffith, filling station operator, and C. O. Vernon—pleaded not guilty and were held to await action of the Federal grand jury. Their bonds were set at $5,000 each.

The complaint charges the quartet with conspiracy to possess, sell and pass counterfeit $100 notes on the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago. Allen was arrested when he appeared as Vernon's attorney.

The Gridiron Parade

Sectional football championships neared a solution yesterday as the Nation's college teams passed in weekly review on gridirons soaked by rain and hidden in mud.

Michigan won the Big Ten crown by beating Minnesota on a field goal, 3-0, and Utah crushed the Colorado Aggies, 16-0, for the Rocky Mountain title. Auburn all but clinched Southern Conference honors by beating Georgia, 14-7.

In the East, Yale trounced Harvard, 19-0, and Pitt furthered its title claims by downing Carnegie, 6-0. Army barely eked out a 7-0 victory over West Virginia Wesleyan. Fordham conquered Oregon State on a safety, 2-0.

Navy showed surprising strength to hold Notre Dame to a 12-0 score. An improved Georgetown team tied Bucknell, 6-6, and Maryland scored a 6-0 victory over Washington and Lee.

COL. ROBINS FAILS TO RECOGNIZE WIFE

Continues to Deny Identity in Hospital at Asheville; Doctor Puzzled.

Asheville, N. C., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Col. Raymond Robins, militant dry leader and social worker, saw his wife in a hospital where he is receiving medical treatment late today for the first time since his mysterious disappearance September 3, but he turned away from her with the statement, "I don't know the lady."

For ten minutes Mrs. Robins talked with her husband alone but he showed no sign of recognition, she said, adding that his mind appeared to be blank so far as she was concerned.

The patient has firmly denied since his identification that he is Col. Robins. Officers said he has insisted several times his name is Rogers.

Still apparently suffering from a partial loss of memory, to which his disappearance which startled the Nation, had been attributed, Col. Robins was placed in Norburn Hospital under a physician's care immediately upon his arrival here this morning.

Mrs. Robins arrived by automobile late this afternoon from Spartanburg, S. C., where she left the train on which she had traveled from Brooksville, Fla., her home. She had received word there last night that her husband had ben located in the mountain village of Whittier, 60 miles from here, prospecting under the name of Raymond Rogers.

"I have just seen Col. Robins. He

Bolivia Calls More Reserves to Colors

Repulse of Six Violent Attacks by Paraguayans Also Reported.

La Paz, Bolivia, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The government today called to the colors all army reserves trained in the years 1923 to 1929, while the army general staff announced continued success against Paraguayan attacks in the Gran Chaco.

The general staff's statement said the Los Campos and Aharoa Regiments repulsed "six violent attacks" in the Fort Saavedra sector, inflicting severe losses on the enemy.

Fort Saavedra has been in a state of siege for several days. Paraguayans claim advances both north and south of the fort, which is located about 60 miles north of Pilcomayo River. La Paz dispatches confirmed these reports that a salient had been formed there.

Buckman landed safely.

WARTIME BLAST WRANGLE TO BE REOPENED HERE

Mixed Claims Board to Hear New Evidence on Jersey Outrages.

GERMANY WAS GIVEN THE HAGUE DECISION

Invisible Ink Letter Called Proof Explosions Were Ordered by Berlin.

By ROBERT F. WHITNEY.

One of the most famous of international litigations—the question as to whether the former imperial German government's sabotage activities were responsible for the "Black Tom" and Kingsland explosions in New Jersey during the World War—will be reopened here tomorrow morning before the German-American Mixed Claims Commission.

The case—settled once two years ago at The Hague in Germany's favor—carries damage claims of American corporations amounting to $40,000,000 against the present German government. The damages are claimed by the Lehigh Valley Railroad, the Canadian Car & Foundry Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Co., and various underwriters.

New evidence, it is understood, will be introduced by the Government to support its contention that the two explosions were official sabotage acts of Germany. The evidence is practically all of a documentary nature, it was said.

Letter Accused Russian.

Foremost among the evidence to be offered will be an invisible ink communication which the Government alleges definitely proves that a man in German employ set the Kingsland fire. The letter, written in a magazine by an avowed German secret service agent, Fred Herrman, is said to incriminate a Russian, Wozniak, at whose bench the fire began.

Wozniak was cleared when the tribunal met at The Hague, although Herrman declared that he had induced him to set the fire with incendiary pencils. The commission decided that Herrman's testimony was false and was given out of spite after he had left German employ.

It also was said that the Government would enter evidence to show that Wozniak went to Mexico City, then allegedly a headquarters of German spies and agents, after the fire. Other evidence, consisting of checks, will be introduced in the case, it was learned.

All of the "props" of espionage and international intrigue will be men-

31 JERSEY ELECTION OFFICIALS ARRESTED

Newark, N. J., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Thirty-one election officials of the Third and Fifth wards were arrested by Essex County detectives late today in connection with the alleged election frauds in these wards. The prisoners were taken to the county courthouse, where they were photographed and finger-printed.

Prosecutor Joseph L. Smith, who ordered the arrests, said information of violations of the election laws on the part of the officials had been furnished his office by the office of the superintendent of elections.

The men were being held at the courthouse tonight pending Smith's decision on the amount of bail he will ask in each case. The prisoners, the prosecutor made clear, are not connected, so far as he knows, with the theft of poll books and ballots this week in an apparent attempt to destroy evidence of the alleged fraud.

The time of the theft of the 7,200 ballots from the subbasement of city hall was established today as shortly before 6 a. m. Wednesday on the evidence of charwomen. Waste paper trucks were used to cart the ballots away to be destroyed. At the time the ballots were being guarded by police.

Baby Escapes Injury In 20-Foot Plunge

Plunging 20 feet to the ground from a second-story window, Charles Alderton, jr., 20-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Alderton, of Olney, escaped injury. He had been playing with other youngsters and apparently lost his balance and fell over the 2-foot high window sill.

The child was taken to Montgomery County General Hospital by the frightened parents and was found to have escaped injury. The child fell on its abdomen on the hard packed ground outside.

RULE IN SENATE MAY BE FORCED ON DEMOCRATS

Control at Short Session Hinges on Swing of Progressives.

PARTY NOT ANXIOUS FOR RESPONSIBILITY

Would Favor Waiting Until Next Session; Wets Hail Possible Shift.

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT.

Possibility that the Democrats may be forced to reorganize the Senate in December regardless of the outcome of the Colorado short term senatorial race was being discussed yesterday on Capitol Hill.

It appears that a group of Progressive Republicans are strongly in favor of the Democrats taking control, whether or not that party gets even a one-vote margin by the election of Walter Walker to the vacant seat of the late Senator Waterman.

Democrats generally are not enthusiastic about reorganizing before March 4. A few progressives, however, are said to feel they ought to take the responsibility, in view of their sweeping victory at the polls and the certainty of reorganization any way within three months.

Progressive Swing Likely.

Even if Karl C. Schuyler (Republican), now leading in the Colorado race, wins over Walker, it would be necessary only for three Senate Progressives to vote with the Democrats to swing the control.

And if only Senators Norris, Nebraska; Johnson, California, and Cutting, of New Mexico, who openly supported Roosevelt in the last campaign, vote with the Democrats on organization matters, control would be clinched, it was pointed out. There is possibility of a larger swing-over.

Present short session membership stands: 47 Democrats, 47 Republicans, 1 Farmer-Labor, and 1 vacancy.

If Schuyler is elected, it will stand: 48 Republicans, 47 Democrats, and 1 Farmer-Labor. The Farmer-Laborite, Shipstead, of Minnesota, has declined to say how he will vote, but in the past he has voted with the Republicans on organization. Progressive support, therefore, will be essential to any change.

Reorganization would entail a general realignment of all committees, with Democrats presiding over each. Vast patronage benefits, to appease the army of job seekers harassing the Democrats, would go with the change.

Responsibilities Involved.

On the other hand, responsibilities so great in magnitude that some veteran Democrats feel they should not be called on to assume them until there is a Democratic President and a member of their own party presiding over the Senate, would be assumed.

The proposed shift in Senate control, incidentally raised the hopes of members who hope for beer legislation at the short session. Many returning members, following the widespread wet victories, have predicted or advocated such legislation immedi-

Red Hunger March Menacing Austria

Linz, Austria, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Communist threats to hold a "hunger march" converging on this city kept police and troops in upper Austria on the alert today.

Streets were patrolled and public buildings heavily guarded by police and soldiers were stationed on all roads leading into the city. Up to midnight 37 arrests were reported, but there were no serious clashes.

Failure of morning papers from Vienna to arrive caused rumors to circulate that a Soviet republic was about to be declared and Vienna was in the grip of a general strike. Many shopkeepers already had drawn iron shutters on their windows when belated papers revealed Vienna was in a normal state.

Hotel Fraud Is Charged To 2 Maryland Women

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Two women were held in $500 bond today on charges of defrauding the Park Central Hotel, a fashionable hostelry.

One of the women said she was Mrs. Mary W. Finley Steers, 58, former president of the Steers Sand & Clay Works, of Severn River, Md. The other woman said she was Mrs. Alice Moriarity, secretary to Mrs. Steers. The hotel charged them with evading payment of two weeks' bill.

$1,179,565 Now in Chest; Big Efforts Today Urged

Less Than Half of Goal Attained; Tumulty Utters Ringing Plea.

With two-thirds of the reporting days exhausted and less than one-half of the Community Chest goal of $2,419,787 reached, officials in charge of the campaign faced a gloomy prospect following yesterday's report meeting at the Willard Hotel. Newbold Noyes, campaign chairman, called particular attention to the closing of the Government offices and the firms solicited through group solicitation on Saturday afternoons and Sunday, respectively, and placed directly upon the Special Gifts and Metropolitan units the burden of making sure that tomorrow's report meeting would not be a "blue Monday."

Mr. Noyes' sentiment was echoed by H. L. Rust, jr., chairman of the Metropolitan Unit, who urged every worker to redouble his or her efforts over Sunday.

"I know you are tired," Mr. Rust said. "All of us are tired. Each of us would like to spend Sunday resting, but I ask each of you to remember that if we lag in our work, it means that Washington men, women and little children will go hungry some time during the next year."

"The minimum number receiving aid from Community Chest agencies is 100,000," said E. C. Graham, president of the Community Chest. "Actual figures will show a much larger number, but even if the Chest cares only for 100,000 persons, that means

Europe May Protest If America Says Pay

Lausanne Parley Likely Should Hoover Deny New Moratorium.

London, Sunday, Nov. 20 (U.P.).—If the United States insists on the December 15 debt payments, the Lausanne conference may be reassembled, and joint representations made to the United States by the European nations, the diplomatic correspondent of the Sunday Express said today.

The writer said he had been informed the United States was almost certain to refuse a moratorium, being expected to send a note Wednesday or Thursday, not refusing to discuss debts, but insisting on the December 15 payments as a preliminary.

The writer said he understood that before asking a moratorium, Britain had been "tipped" that President Hoover would support the application, but "political events seem to have been too strong for him and he had to reconsider his plans."

The article suggested that if payment is necessary, Britain will pay in gold, not only the gold in the Bank of England, but will "melt down trinkets, sovereigns and wedding rings."

YOUNG DESPERADO SEIZED IN MURDER

Youth Also Is Suspected of Attacking Niece of Chicago Police Official.

Chicago, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Ignatius Varecha, 17-year-old alleged desperado who was the object for three days of one of the city's most intensive man hunts as a suspected killer, was captured late today as he watched a performance in a cheap burlesque theater.

Varecha, a fugitive from the State epileptic colony at Dixon and possessor of a long police record, was identified through Bertillon records, although he at first gave a false name.

The youth was sought as the slayer of Frank Jordan, 38, last Wednesday night, who later held up Miss Lillian Henry, niece of Deputy Police Commissioner John Alcock, and her escort, John Guisinger. The hold-up man trussed Guisinger, tossed him from his car, and assaulted Miss Henry, whom he held prisoner for several hours.

Alcock rushed from his city hall office to police headquarters immediately upon being informed of the arrest, and took charge of the case. Varecha was bundled into a squad car and whisked to Miss Henry's

Bus Boy Seizes Robber After Being Wounded

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A hold-up man who had seized a $2,800 pay roll in an automat restaurant on Seventh avenue, one block below Times Square, was captured today after he had wounded an employe and stampeded several hundred customers.

Florentino Gonzales, a 20-year-old bus boy, was the one wounded. Although shot through one arm, he grappled with the robber and bore him to the floor as approximately 800 diners scrambled for three exits.

ACTION IS UNLIKELY ON MAPES PROGRAM

Due to Go Over With Traction Merger Proposal to Next Regular Congress.

The rush of national and international legislation to the forefront of the congressional calendar yesterday held out little prospect for any major District legislation, aside from a local supply bill, at the coming short session.

Thrown overboard in the rush probably will be the drastic $4,000,000 Mapes tax program for the District, already passed by the House and awaiting action in the Senate District committee.

The controversial District traction merger, long pending before Congress, but passed by the present House and awaiting the Senate's disposal, also is expected to go over until the Seventy-third Congress.

Death of the Mapes program at least for the present session would be welcome news to District residents, virtually all of whom would be hit by the income, estate, automobile weight and additional gasoline taxes involved.

Yet it was learned authoritatively yesterday that Senate leaders think there will be little if any time for any District matters that can not be disposed of in the morning calendar hour. Obviously neither the local tax program or the prospective merger could be.

Herbert D. Brown, director of the Bureau of Efficiency, said yesterday that his bureau will have a report ready on the House Mapes resolution abolishing the 60-40 basis of Federal-District fiscal relations, by the first

Robber Gets $14,000, Wounding Messenger

Evansville, Ind., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A lone robber escaped with $14,000 this morning after wounding a messenger who was carrying the money to the West Side branch of the Old National Bank.

The man grabbed two of three sacks of money which the messenger, Walter Bishoff, was carrying. The third sack, containing $2,000, was left lying on the sidewalk as the robber fled in a car which he had parked nearby. Bishoff was shot in both arms when he refused to obey the command to surrender the money.

Big Cut in Cost of Veterans Will Be Pressed.

UNIT MERGING PART OF PLAN

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN.

A further reduction of approximately $550,000,000 in the Federal budget for the fiscal year 1934 was indicated yesterday following an extraordinary session of the Cabinet devoted to President Hoover's financial program for the final session of the Seventy-second Congress.

Although no detailed figures regarding the drastic slashing will be made public until the annual budget message goes to Congress next month, Treasury officials indicated, an attempt would be made to cut as much as $350,000,000 from the present budget of the Veterans Bureau. This saving would be realized through elimination of many of the benefits now allowed for disabilities not connected with military service.

Reorganization Program.

An additional saving of approximately $100,000,000 would be realized through curtailment of public works, plus reorganization of the Federal establishment, elimination of duplicating and over-lapping functions and the consolidation of various bureaus and divisions engaged in similar work.

The balance of the 1934 reduction would be achieved by a general trimming of corners in the various departments and independent establishments, even below the figures set in the economy measures enacted in the last session.

After going over the Budget Bureau's figures yesterday morning in a hastily summoned Cabinet session, President Hoover again expressed his determination to present a balanced budget for 1934.

The net reduction promised in the White House summary yesterday exceeds by some $50,000,000 the $500,000,000 reduction urged in the President's general letter September 10 to all department heads.

Following is the text of yesterday's White House statement:

"'At the meeting of the Cabinet this morning, the budget situation was reviewed and the reductions in appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next were settled at about $700,000,000. This will, however, be off-set by certain increases in uncontrollable items such as interest and amortization on the public debt and tax refunds to the extent of about $150,000,000.

"The increase in fixed charges is partly due to the Government investments in the Reconstruction Corporation, the land banks, and elsewhere, of over $1,000,000,000 which will ultimately return to the Treasury.

"'The administration is determined to present a balanced budget.

"The detailed figures of the budget are never given out until the President's budget message is communicated to the Congress."

With two deficiency bills yet to be enacted in the short session, the final appropriations for the current fiscal year, ending next June 30, will ag-

CONGRESS TO PROBE FAILURE OF RELIEF

R. F. C. Policy Criticized as Hunger Marches on Capital Loom.

(Associated Press.)

Relief machinery set up at the last session of Congress is going to get a thorough inspection, and probably some overhauling, in the meeting beginning next month.

Coalescing moves in that direction became more apparent yesterday when Representative Swing, Republican, who has served California in Congress for eleven years, said that Reconstruction Corporation officials either must adopt a more liberal policy or Congress will amend the act that created the agency.

Senator La Follette, Wisconsin Progressive, is doing preliminary work in his branch toward passage of a $5,000,000,000 bond issue for relief and public construction. He feels relief efforts up to now have failed to produce predicted benefits.

Home Loans Called Failure.

Representative Cochran, of Missouri, chairman of the House expenditures committee, is conferring with colleagues to see if the Home Loan Bank system can be broadened.

"So far," he said yesterday, "the Home Loan Bank has been a failure."

A group of House independents, headed by Representative Huddleston (Democrat), Alabama, and Representative LaGuardia (Republican), New York, plan to seek more direct relief. LaGuardia favors unemployment insurance; Huddleston says the "first obligation of the Government is to feed the hungry" and that the Reconstruction Corporation has not been able to do that.

Valuable Time Lost.

Swing said yesterday "One of the first matters Congress will want to take up in December is why the Reconstruction Corporation has not been successful in making loans which would put men to work."

"Months have gone by since relief measures were enacted to meet the unemployment crisis," he added. "We are already hearing the rumbling of unemployment marches upon the Capital, forecasting a bitter winter for millions of unemployed.

"The hopes of Congress that relief would be found by liberalizing the Federal Reserve rediscount law, by Federal aid given to farm land banks, the creation of the Home Loan Bank and the gigantic pool of national credit put at the disposal of the Reconstruction Corporation have been doomed to disappointment.

"Congress wants to know why."

gregate a little more than $4,000,000,000. As now outlined by the President and his fiscal advisers, the final total for 1934 should be a bit under $3,500,000,000.

Although some of the President's advisers have indicated recently that sharp budget slashing might obviate additional revenue legislation in the short session of Congress, the belief was expressed in other informed quarters that even in the face of the savings indicated, increased taxes can not be avoided.

In the face of the present deficit of $715,000,000, there appears to be a growing belief on Capitol Hill that the President will recommend next month a general extension of the manufacturers' sales tax.

Hope for Cut in Deficit.

Thus far, however, no official word has come from either the White House or Treasury concerning the probability of a new revenue bill. Treasury officials are operating on the estimate that the final deficit for 1933 will be not more than $700,000,000.

Against this figure, fiscal experts of the House ways and means committee place their own unofficial estimate of $1,000,000,000 or more. The final figure will depend largely upon the returns from the new income tax schedules enacted in the last session, which will not be available until after January 1.

Thus far the new taxes imposed last session have fallen considerably below their estimated yield, but the Treasury still is hopeful that once the income returns begin to pile up the prospective annual deficit indicated by the first four months' experience will be reduced sharply.

Veterans' Cost Action Assured.

Preparatory to a demand that hundreds of millions be slashed from the nonservice-connected awards to veterans, the Veterans' Administration has prepared an exhaustive study of such allowances. A total of 460,000 persons who suffered no disabilities in the line of military duty now are receiving some sort of compensation from the Federal Government, this report shows. The total savings which might be realized through the elimination of every sort of nonservice award are estimated at between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000.

A similar study was made by the special economy committee of the House last session, but the committee's recommendations on this point were rejected by the House.

Since that time, however, the popular demand for drastic Federal economies has grown to the proportions of a tidal wave. Many party leaders in the House and Senate who were indifferent to the veterans' budget last session have returned to Washington this month prepared to give the matter studious attention.

Reorganization of the entire Federal establishment has been advanced during the Congressional recess by virtue of a special study of consolidation and coordination plans in the Bureau of the Budget.

President Hoover instructed Budget Director Roop on September 13 to prepare a detailed reorganization plan for presentation to the December session. Col. Roop has been in conference several times at the White House this week, and there were indications following yesterday's Cabinet meeting, in which Mr. Roop participated, that this plan would go to Capitol Hill with the budget message.

Roosevelt Bids Bratton To Georgia Conference

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Senator Sam G. Bratton (Democrat), New Mexico, received an invitation today to confer with President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt at Warm Springs, Ga., about December 3.

The senator said he accepted. Gov. Roosevelt's message did not indicate the nature of the questions to be discussed.

Democratic Harmony Vital In Choice of New Speaker

By J. BERNARD McDONNELL.

Possessed of something of the nature of a detonating cap capable of setting off powerful political explosives, the fight over selection of the Speaker, and organization of the next House will affect not only the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt as President but probably the duration of the control of the Government by the Democratic party as well.

Potentialities of the contests—the question of who shall be Speaker is inextricably interwoven with the question of who shall be party leader and other things—the potentialities are such that the contests already have spread beyond the membership of the House and shall involve, directly or indirectly, most of the national leaders of the party.

The name of President-elect Roosevelt already has been brought into the fight through the anxiety of those who speculate on the likelihood of Representative John J. O'Connor, of New York, being elected Speaker. It has been suggested that Mr. O'Connor's ambitions to be Speaker shall have the support of Roosevelt because Mr. O'Connor's brother, Basil, formerly was a law partner of Mr. Roosevelt and has been associated with some of the most influential party leaders in New York.

Other candidates also have sought to gather about their ambitions the warmth of the cloak of this or that party leader and inevitably eyes have turned to New York. The choleric Representative John E. Rankin, of Mississippi, paid his respects to the campaign in a statement in the course of which he said he hadn't any personal quarrels with any of the other candidates but he disapproved of things every other candidate had done. Rather than be Speaker, Mr. Rankin said, he wouldn't do those things.

The outstanding and probably successful candidate is Representative Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, who now holds the post of floor leader of the Democrats in the House.

Representative Rainey has been elected to Congress fourteen times. He was licked once. That was in the Harding landslide. He was reelected the next time and has been reelected since. His enemies say he will not be strong enough to run the next House. His weakness consists in his frankness and utter disregard of what may be the direction of the popular mind. His strength lies in his patent sincerity, his long length of service in Congress, his unquestioned ability, his knowledge of tariff, taxes, foreign debts, and his willingness to recognize that the ideas of some one else are entitled to consideration.

Rainey Friend of Roosevelt.

Representative Rainey, it might be said in passing, is a close friend of Mr. Roosevelt. He was one of the original Roosevelt men. He advocated Roosevelt long before the national Democratic convention assembled and he is proud of the convention selection and confident of the benefits of Mr. Roosevelt's administration as President. If, as has been suggested, Mr. Roosevelt attempted to further the candidacy of any other member of the House who would like to be Speaker it would inflict a deep wound on Mr. Rainey, who is a powerful and influential leader in the House.

Efforts of some of the enthusiastic friends of Representative O'Connor to give his candidacy a Roosevelt cloak are not taken seriously. Mr. O'Connor has not tried to do that with any seriousness.

So far there are only two announced candidates, Representatives Rainey and Rankin. Mr. Rankin's candidacy is not taken seriously by anyone else. Neither is the assumed candidacy of Mr. O'Connor.

There are others, however, who really are after the post and have a chance of getting it. Among them are Representative Joseph Byrns, of Tennessee, chairman of the House appropriations committee and chairman of the last congressional campaign committee; Representative John McDuffie, of Alabama, chairman of the House economy committee; William B. Bankhead, of Alabama, and some others who are keeping their hopes quiet, but working.

Speaker Garner, friends say, will adopt a hands-off policy in the forthcoming fight. He intends to leave its settlement to the House when he goes to the north end of the Capitol to preside over the Senate, it is said. But friendships of long standing, as well as party considerations, will constrain him to participate in the many little conferences which will be held by Democrats to work out a solution.

Fight Over Party Leader.

In the party conferences preceding the organization of the present House Mr. Garner played a prominent part in persuading the Southerners not to try to grab off all the posts of power, and Representative Rainey was elected leader and unusual appointments on powerful committees were given to newly elected Democrats from the other sections of the country. By right of seniority, the Southerners will continue to have great power in the next House, as chairman of many important committees, and much the same line of political reasoning as was used effectively last time will be employed in the forthcoming scrap, although there will be one important difference in its possible effectiveness. Last time the plea was not to do anything which would antagonize party adherents outside the South, and thereby jeopardize chances of national victory in the elections just held. Having won that victory overwhelmingly, the argument will have less restraining power.

Not only a new Speaker is to be elected by the Democrats next Congress, but a party leader, as well. If Representative Rainey, present leader, is denied the natural succession to the Speaker's chair, will he be reelected floor leader? If he is elected Speaker, who will be elected leader?

Representative Byrns has been suggested for this place. Out of the scramble another man may be selected as either Speaker or leader, in response to the plea that party interests demand geographical division of the offices. He is Representative William A. Ayres, of Kansas, who has been elected to nine terms.

All of those most prominently mentioned for Speaker are to be classed as conservatives with the exception of Mr. Rainey. He, on the contrary, is regarded by some of his ultra-conservative colleagues not only as a liberal but a wild-eyed one.

Strange as might appear at first glance the large majority won by the Democrats last week is likely to make for difficulty in controlling the House membership, and this as well as the other factors which will sway the speakership fight, undoubtedly will revive the movement for a Democratic steering committee to formulate the party's legislative program. This was proposed at the beginning of the present Congress but was brushed aside with the statement that the Democrats on the ways and means committee acted as the steering committee.

Many Problems Faced.

What happened to the committee's tax bill will be recalled and the demand for a steering committee of broader membership will be more insistent this time. Incidentally, should Mr. Rainey be chosen Speaker, it would mean the committee would have lost its three ranking Democrats, Representatives James W. Collier, of Mississippi; Charles R. Crisp, of Georgia, who fell in the recent elections, and Rainey. Several leaders already have proposed that Mr. Rainey, because of his wide experience and recognized knowledge in the field of tax and tariff legislation, should give up his Speakership aspirations and take the committee chairmanship. Should he be elected Speaker it would put Representative Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, a conservative, in the chairmanship under the seniority rule.

The fight does not appear likely to be sharply drawn along liberal versus conservative lines, but that cleavage as well as antagonisms resulting from the contests incident to organization of the House may very materially affect the solidarity of the party.

The House will be confronted with taxation, tariff, international debts, payments to veterans, reduction of governmental expenditures, repeal of the prohibition amendment, determination of the national policy toward gigantic public utilities corporations and natural resources and many other important and highly controversial subjects. Serious impairment of the ability of leaders to control their unwieldy majority would affect the course of legislation and consequently the results achieved in the first two years of the administration and the party's stay in power.

ROOSEVELT RESTING AT MOTHER'S HOME

Hyde Park, N. Y., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Gov. Roosevelt arrived here today for a week-end rest at the home of his mother before next week's momentous war debt discussion with President Hoover and conferences with Democratic congressional leaders.

The President-elect, after meeting with Mr. Hoover on Tuesday afternoon, will remain in Washington until Wednesday afternoon. It is expected he will talk with Senator Claude A. Swanson, of Virginia, who will become chairman of the foreign relations committee in the next Congress, and the other Virginia senator, Carter Glass, one of the Senate's financial leaders, as well as others.

After his arrival here by automobile from Albany in a heavy rain storm, Mr. Roosevelt said he would, over the week-end, give no consideration to the possible trend of the White House conference.

"The governor intends to do a lot of listening," one of his aids said regarding the Washington meeting.

Overnight guests at Krum Elbow were Viscount and Lady Astor and George Palmer Putnam and Mrs. Putnam, the former Amelia Earhart, the aviator. Miss Earhart, introduced by Mrs. Roosevelt, gave a lecture tonight at the Poughkeepsie High School on flying.

Tomorrow the Roosevelts and their guests will attend church at the little ivy-covered Hyde Park Episcopal Church where several generations of Roosevelts have worshiped.

Late this afternoon, despite the prolonged rain, which had drenched the Hudson Valley district, Mr. Roosevelt himself drove to the Roosevelt cottage on an adjoining farm for tea. The English nobleman and his American-born wife and the Putnams also attended. Miss Nancy Cook and Miss Marion Dickerman, close friends of the Roosevelts, and business associates of Mrs. Roosevelt, were the hostesses.

Autopsy No Help In Auto Mystery

An autopsy performed yesterday on the body of Mrs. Matilda King, 60, failed to disclose whether two or three automobiles ran over her before she was thrown to curb in front of the Hungarian Legation, in the 2900 block of Massachusetts avenue northwest, Friday night.

Mrs. King, a cook in the home of Mrs. Sherman Flint, 3041 W street northwest, was pronounced dead by an Emergency Hospital physician, who was called to the scene. She suffered fractures of both legs and arm, internal injuries and a fractured skull.

Deputy Coroner C. J. Murphy, who performed the autopsy, said that the condition of the body indicated that more than one vehicle must have struck her. Witnesses told members of the homicide squad conflicting stories of the accident.

Police are working on the theory that the woman was standing on the curb after alighting from a bus and that a vehicle struck her, throwing her into the street. One or two other automobiles are thought to have passed over the body. Police have been unable to find any trace of the car operators responsible for the fatality.

Girl Reserves Ask Donations of Dolls

Y.W.C.A. Gets Thousands of Requests for Christmas Stocking Vacancies.

The Girl Reserves of the Young Women's Christian Association are in need of many more dolls, outgrown dolls, shopworn dolls, and all things pertaining to dolls for their 1932 Doll Hospital atop the Y. W. C. A. Building, at Seventeenth and K streets northwest, where the old and worn dolls are put in first-class condition for the girls of Washington who otherwise would not get any dolls from Kris Kringle at Christmas time.

Already hundreds and hundreds of battered but well-loved dolls have been collected by the Girl Reserves and are in the process of being mended and dressed, in readiness for Christmas Eve.

Thousands of requests are pouring into the Y. W. C. A. for dolls this year, and so the Reserves urge all their friends and the public in general to come to their aid and send more dolls as soon as possible. If notified, the Girl Reserves will call or send for the dolls and doll "fixing," but, if possible, the public is asked to send their dolls to the hospital any time between 9 a. m. and 10 p. m.

50, cook at the home of Mrs. Sherman Flint, 3041 W street northwest, was killed late Friday near the Hungarian Legation in the 2900 block of Massachusetts avenue northwest, was clarified somewhat last night when Private William Thomas Schlosser, 31, of the Ninth Precinct, is said to have admitted his car struck the woman.

After returning home from duty yesterday, Private Schlosser is said to have called up Lieut. E. J. Cullinane of the Ninth Precinct, advising him of his connection with the accident. On advice of Lieut. Cullinane, he later reported to the homicide squad. On his admission of connection with the accident, he was held on a coroner's bond of $1,000. He refused to give a full account of the accident, pending advice of his counsel.

According to police, he is believed to have driven the car that struck the woman. He was not on duty Friday, and is said to have had members of his family in the car when the accident occurred. His explanation for failing to report the accident at the time, is said to have been that he became "befuddled and frightened."

A taxicab driver who is said to have seen the accident, told police that the woman was knocked down by one car, and run over by two others. An autopsy yesterday failed, however, to disclose definitely whether the body was run over before being thrown to the curb.

Deputy Coroner C. J. Murphy, who performed the autopsy, said the condition of the body indicated that more than one vehicle must have struck the woman, who suffered fractures of both legs and a fracture of the skull.

Another Woman Killed.

Mrs. Martha Henault, 70, 517 L street northwest, was fatally injured late yesterday when struck near Fifth street and Rhode Island avenue northwest by the car of Mrs. Evelyn Mae Woodward, 20, 3021 Channing street northeast.

The woman was taken to Emergency Hospital, but was pronounced dead on arrival. Considerable time elapsed before the woman was identified, as her personal effects furnished no clew. The identification was finally made by Thomas P. Farrall, in whose home the woman was a roomer. He said the woman was evidently on her way to the market when struck. He said she is survived by one son, Robert E. Henault, 1810 North Capitol street.

Mrs. Woodward, with her mother, was taking her father, William W. Carridge, to a union meeting at Eighth and I streets northwest, when the accident occurred. She told police she had just passed a street car and did not see the woman, who was apparently struck by the fender of her car.

Police said the woman apparently walked from behind a parked car. Mrs. Woodward was held on a technical charge, pending the coroner's verdict in the case.

Michael Duffey, 54, 1335 I street northwest, suffered a broken leg late yesterday, when struck by the car of William J. Bolac, 1617 Eastern avenue, Kenilworth, D. C., on Eleventh street, between H and I streets northwest. Witnesses said the man stepped from between two parked cars and had started to cross the street. He was treated at Casualty Hospital.

Struck at Eighth street and Maryland avenue northeast, Mrs. Anna L. Harvey, 61, 219 Eighth street northeast, was taken to Casualty Hospital, suffering from cuts and bruises. Police said the car was driven by Howard P. Klotz, 710 G street northeast.

Mrs. Flora Barr, 67, 5112 Connecticut avenue, received severe cuts and bruises and possibly internal injuries when struck by a Washington Electric Railway Co. bus at Connecticut and Nebraska avenues. The bus was driven by Luther A. Dodd, 52, 1301 E street northeast. The woman was taken to Emergency Hospital after receiving first-aid treatment from a private physician.

Man, 70, Is Injured.

Robert Moseley, 70, was struck at Eleventh street and Pennsylvania avenue by the car of Lawrence T. Boswell, 22, 4313 Bowen road southeast. He was taken to Emergency Hospital and later transferred to Gallinger Hospital, where it was reported he had suffered a fracture of his right hip.

Carl Finning, 50, 5836 Chevy Chase Parkway, suffered a broken collar bone, and severe cuts and bruises when struck by the car of Virgil G. Kremell, 22, 1822 First street northwest at Northampton street and Connecticut avenue. He was treated by a private physician.

Mrs. Edith Tucker, 35, 1203 Thirty-first street northwest, was struck by the car of Leslie C. Barr, 24, of Baltimore, while crossing the street in front of 3104 M street northwest. She was treated at Georgetown Hospital for minor injuries. Barr was held on a charge of reckless driving.

Andrew Jameson, 1517 Twenty-fifth street northeast, was struck by the car of Robert E. Hibbs, 6121 Monroe street northeast, at Good Hope road and U street southeast. He received only minor injuries. Hibbs was later arrested at his home and charged with leaving the scene of an accident.

Other Accident Victims.

VOTE BUYING BARED IN DELAWARE QUIZ

Witness Says Whites Were Given $5, Negroes, $2.50; DuPont's Denial.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Testimony of vote buying, with the prices fixed at "$5 for whites and $2.50 each for colored votes," was given today before the House committee on campaign expenditures investigating alleged irregularities in Delaware.

Lammot duPont, president of the Better Government League of Delaware, which had been charged with the excessive use of money at the polls, asserted he did not know votes were purchased.

DuPont said he personally contributed about $20,000 of the money collected. Another witness placed all contributions at $54,840.

Source of Money Hidden.

"I am satisfied none of my money was used in vote buying," DuPont declared. Why, one of the objects of the league is to prevent the use of money in Delaware elections."

Testimony of vote buying was given by John Argo, of Slaughters Neck, Sussex County, who said that in the Republican primary election for State offices and Congress, on September 10, "I bought white votes for $5 and colored votes for $2.50 each."

Argo, on cross-examination, said he was hazy on the source of the money. Finally he testified.

"I was given $20 by a man in Allendale, whose name is Warren, for the purpose of buying votes."

"Isn't it true," he was asked, "that you told him O'Connell, an investigator for the committee, that you got the money from Mr. Truitt, the Republican leader"

Magistrate Enters Denial.

"Yes, I said that, but it isn't true. I made a mistake, and told my wife so the other night. I am not now sure where the money came from, but I was told that it came through Dr. Grier, who is Republican leader in Milford."

In emphatic manner, Magistrate Lucius C. Jones denied that his office was used "as the pay-off place" in either the primary or general election by representatives of the Better Government League.

"Was not the back room of your office used to buy votes of a large number of colored voters?" he was asked.

"No, it was not. I was there all day."

They were tried before a jury which convicted each on four of the six counts against them. The maximum penalty is five years imprisonment and $1,000 fine on each count.

PINCHOT PONDERING CHALLENGE TO DAVIS

Weighs Advisability of Questioning Right of Senator to His Seat.

(Associated Press.)

Gov. Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, said yesterday he was "weighing in his mind" the advisability of challenging the right of Senator James J. Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania, to a seat in the next Congress.

The governor said Davis' unofficial plurality left little doubt that he should be given a certificate of election. With the certificate, he said, might go a personal letter to the Senate questioning Davis' right to a seat.

Several days after Davis was indicted by a Federal grand jury in New York on charges of violating lottery laws, Pinchot asked the Pennsylvania Republican committee to replace Davis on its ticket. The committee refused and gave the junior senator full support throughout his campaign. The indictment was returned against Davis as head of the Loyal Order of Moose.

"And I haven't changed my mind a bit," Pinchot said after recalling that he told the State committee it should not support a candidate under indictment.

In 1927 Pinchot gave a "certificate of doubt" to the election of William S. Vare, of Philadelphia, to the Senate. The Senate later denied Vare a seat on grounds of excessive expenditures in the primaries.

Pinchot called on Senators Borah (Republican), Idaho, and Reed (Republican), Pennsylvania, and at the offices of several others. He said he told them the unemployment situation was critical in Pennsylvania and discussed possible remedies.

Lewis to Describe Sales Tax Project

Representative Will Speak efore Kensington Chamber Wednesday.

Representative David J. Lewis, of Maryland, will be the principal speaker at the meeting of the Kensington Chamber of Commerce Wednesday night at 8 o'clock in the Kensington School. Mr. Lewis will talk on the sales tax.

The chamber is launching a campaign for adoption by the Federal Government of a manufacturer's sales tax as a means of balancing the national budget. As a member of the ways and means committee of the House, Representative Lewis has made a special study of the subject and promises new and interesting facts, according to W. I. Cliveland, president.

The Chambers of Commerce of Silver Spring and Bethesda and other local civic groups have been invited to attend and to coordinate in the campaign for adoption of the sales tax.

Civil Service Head Indicates Change

That the fortunes of political war may change the make-up of the Civil Service Commission with the expiration March 4 of the present administration, was indicated yesterday by Thomas E. Campbell, president of that body, and a Republican appointee of President Hoover.

In a Community Chest drive talk before the 400 assembled employes of the Civil Service Commission yesterday, Mr. Campbell said it was probably the last time he would be associated in such a movement with "the civil service famly."

Mr. Campbell, a former governor of Arizona, has been with the commission about two years. The other Republican member is George R. Wales, whose retirement for age occurs at the end of this month, unless the Chief Executive accedes to a commission request and grants him an extension.

$40,000 Liquor Yacht Auctioned for $13,600

Boston, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The big twin-motored yacht Prudence, seized with a cargo of liquor valued at $150,000 in Dorchester Bay recently, was bid in at United States marshal's sale today for $13,600.

The high bidder was W. P. Kiggins, member of a New York yacht brokerage firm which designed and built the Prudence, and he said he was acting for Louis M. Plansoen, wealthy merchant of Belleville, N. J. The yacht was appraised at $40,000, and it is customary to require a bid of two-thirds the appraised value. The Federal court next Wednesday will either approve or reject the sale. Occupants of cars from States as far away as North Carolina were drawn to the auction sale.

THOMAS SAYS VOTE IS DISAPPOINTMENT

But States He Had Rather Be in Own Shoes Than in Roosevelt's.

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Norman Thomas, defeated Socialist candidate for President, declared today, on the eve of his forty-eighth birthday, that he would rather be in his own shoes than in President-elect Roosevelt's.

"First," he explained, "because I'm right.

"Second, because I haven't got the Democratic party on my hands."

He expressed frank disappointment over the vote he received, then added:

"But the situation of the Socialists is better today than I thought it would be. I'm hearing from people throughout the country; they're saying they want to go on; we've only made a beginning."

He attributed the Democratic plurality to mass psychology.

"It was a stampede; really they weren't voting for Roosevelt, they were voting against Hoover—the hate vote."

He estimated the counted Socialist vote at not more than 60 per cent of the actual Socialist vote.

"Not entirely because of fraud, but because particularly in smaller communities they don't take the trouble to count the Socialist vote, while in the big cities there is fraud."

Of the future he said:

"I'm going to keep up the fight for unemployment relief. I'll oppose a sales tax. I'll go to the young, strong Socialist organizations and help them grow."

Attorney of Capital Kentucky Colonel

John Paul Jones Is Named While Presiding Over Phi Beta Gamma.

John Paul Jones, prominent Washington attorney and native of the Capital, was yesterday appointed a colonel on the personal staff of the Governor of Kentucky, according to an Associated Press dispatch last night.

Since that time he has been associated with several law firms in the city, and last year opened his own office in the Potomac Bank Building at Wisconsin avenue and M street northwest.

CONSOLATION.

To want you, to need you.
To wait for you in vain;
Half I find it pleasure,
Despite its stinging pain.
To have known you, to have prised you,
To have learned of you the need,
To have loved you, even waiting,
Even loss is sweet, indeed.
Not in anguish of self pity,
But in pity for the sad,
Who have never known the glory
That a little time I had.
Not in sorrow without solace,
Not in tears that ever flow,
I have counted blessings greater
Than the world can ever know.
To want you, to need you,
These are not all in vain,
For in my happy memories
I have you back again.

Senate Lawyers' Inquiry May Decide Fate of Beer

Judiciary Committee Expected to Move Early in December on Mandate of Chamber to Determine Just What Is Intoxicating Beverage.

(Associated Press.)

What Congress does this winter about beer may depend to a large extent upon the outcome of an inquiry ordered by the Senate into the question of what constitutes an intoxicating beverage.

In the closing hours of the last session, the Senate turned this perplexing problem over to its judiciary committee, composed entirely of lawyers, for investigation and a report. Nothing yet has been done by the committee, but this is likely to be the first move in the December session on the beer question.

With the Democrats elected overwhelmingly on a platform calling for immediate modification of the Volstead act as well as repeal of the eighteenth amendment, the committee's inquiry may become of much greater importance than was supposed when it was first ordered by the Senate.

Democrats Deny Dodging.

At that time, proponents of beer contended that the move was made so Democrats could dodge a vote on the beer issue.

This was denied by the Democrats, some of whom, including Robinson, their leader, said they were willing to vote for beer that was not intoxicating.

The question came up when Senator Bingham (Republican), Connecticut, pressed for action on his bill to allow 2.75 per cent beer. The motion to refer the measure to the judiciary committee for inquiry into what constitutes an intoxicating beverage, was made by Robinson and carried, 50 to 25.

Ever since Congress wrote one-half of 1 per cent into the Volstead law, the argument over what constitutes an intoxicating beverage has excited discussion from one end of the country to the other.

Senator Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, and coauthor of the eighteenth amendment, gave one side of the controversy in that last Senate debate, when he said that figure had been selected because it was formerly used by the liquor interests, and had been fixed by several States before prohibition as the intoxicating borderline.

Amendment Aimed at Beer.

The prohibition amendment, Sheppard said, was chiefly aimed at beer because that was the big preprohibition drink.

The eighteenth amendment merely provides that the manufacture, sale and transportation of "intoxicating liquor" shall be prohibited, without attempting a definition of that flexible term.

The judiciary committee's inquiry will be made under Chairman Norris (Republican), Nebraska, long one of prohibition's leading supporters, who has now announced for modification.

Norris takes the position that modification now may avert eventual repeal, and thus save the prohibition amendment itself. The judiciary committee itself is composed chiefly of members who in the past have been supporters of the liquor laws.

One of its most prominent members is Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, long a dry spokesman, who has predicted that nothing will be done at the short session to legalize beer.

SHORT SESSION SENATE RULE MAY BE FORCED ON DEMOCRATS

ately. Some even predict a repeal resolution will be acted on.

Virtually all of the Democratic senators who have returned to Washington, have declared their support of the Democratic platform on prohibition, including Senators Harrison, of Mississippi; Ashurst, of Arizona; Byrnes, of South Carolina; and George, of Georgia, all supporters of the dry laws in the past.

"If the Treasury deficit continues to mount," Harrison said, "I see no reason why beer should not be legalized."

Ashurst asserted it would be "embezzlement of power" for the Democrats to fail to carry out their platform pledges, and George said he would "vote for a sensible definition of an intoxicating beverage."

"The question of modification of the Volstead act will be out of the way by Christmas," Byrnes said.

Not Affected by Jones Death.

The control issue probably will not be in any way affected by the death yesterday of Senator Wesley L. Jones (Republican), Washington, chairman of the powerful Senate appropriations committee. Gov. Roland H. Hartley, of Washington, a Republican, is expected to name another member of his party to succed Jones for the "lame duck" session. Jones was defeated for reelection by Homer T. Bone, a Democrat.

A shift in committee leadership may result, however, if the Republicans retain control of the Senate. Senator Smoot (Republican), Utah, is next in line for the appropriations chairmanship, but he already is chairman of the Senate finance committee. Many think he would prefer to retain his present assignment.

It is possible, however, that Senator Hale (Republican), Maine, next in line, would give up his present chairmanship of the naval affairs committee to take the appropriations post. He has been active in appropriation matters, and last year was one of the Senate conferees on the economy bill.

Falls Church Organizes Community Relief Body

The various charitable organizations and churches of Falls Church, Va., have organized into a community relief association under the leadership of the Rev. Robert Allen Castleman, retired rector of the Falls Church Episcopal Church, to take care of the town's needy during the winter. Mayor L. P. Daniel says that the appeal will be greater than ever before, and he is actively supporting the new organization.

Yesterday the Falls Church Boy Scouts troop circulated petitions addressed to the residents of the town, asking them to make their charitable contributions locally, instead of in Washington. The Rev. Mr. Castleman said last year arrangements were made with the Washington Community Chest whereby contributions made by local citizens working in Washington could be returned to Virginia charitable organizations at the request of the contributor, but this year is was not possible to make such arrangements.

Braden Addresses Engineers' Parley

Arlington County Manager Stresses Utility of His Technical Training.

Engineering training is peculiarly adaptable to the work of a county manager, Roy S. Braden, manager of Arlington County, Va., told members of the Washington Chapter of the American Association of Engineers at their recent meeting at the Kennedy-Warren.

Describing municipal engineering problems, Mr. Braden interspersed his address with anecdotes of the twelve years he has spent as manager of Arlington County, which is the smallest such political subdivision as well as the only county having a manager.

Kenneth P. Armstrong was appointed by the association to take the place of Morton G. Lloyd, recently resigned as delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations. Donal L. Chamberlin, president of the chapter, presided.

HITLER AGAIN ASKS FOR HELM OF REICH

Hindenburg, Cordial This Time, Hears Fervent Plea; 4 Points Weighed.

Berlin, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—For the second time in three months Adolf Hitler, who was a corporal in the World War, applied today to Field Marshal Paul von Hindenburg, president of Germany, to be made chancellor of the Reich.

This time, in marked contrast to their meeting August 13, Hitler was invited to sit down for an hour and to talk with frank cordiality. As he departed from the president's residence, he was asked to come back for another conference next Tuesday.

After listening patiently to the National Socialist leader, the president suggested Hitler lay his aims before other party leaders and tell the president at their next audience how they reacted to them. A government statement issued tonight said, "Personal questions were not considered. Hitler merely gave a summary of the aims of his movement."

Although political commentators said today's meeting in nowise indicated that the president had changed his mind sufficiently about his adversary in the presidential campaign to share with him responsibility for Germany's destiny, still it was agreed that a beginning had been made in achieving a better understanding between the two most popular leaders.

Considerable work behind the scenes was involved in bringing about the meeting between these two erstwhile bitter antagonists. And political observers see plenty of work ahead in the matter of fitting the National Socialist movement into the president's scheme for a government "of national concentration."

Neither Hitler nor Von Hindenburg was willing to discuss their meeting. On reliable authority, it was learned that the Nazi leader, apparently chastened by the setback of the Reichstag elections November 6, dropped the attitude that had appeared arrogant to the president in the August 13 meeting.

Pleads With President.

Instead of demanding the chancellorship Hitler pleaded with the president, according to this reliable source, to permit him to place his movement of 12,000,000 Germans, most of them youthful and enthusiastic, behind the venerable field marshal's unique authority.

In the course of the one-hour conversation the national socialist leader concentrated on four points.

1. That the Nazis are Germany's last bulwark against Communism.

2. That the reichswehr (the army) is sacrosanct to the Hitlerites and that everything will be done to promote its efficiency and popularize it among the masses of the people.

Fight Against Treaty.

3. That the fight against the restrictions of the Versailles treaty will be carried on and intensified.

4. That a cabinet headed by Hitler would consider an important domestic task to be to get the jobless off the streets and into productive work.

Weeks of laborious effort by third parties preceded today's meeting.

First Gen. Kurt von Schleicher, defense minister, had to be reconciled to Hitler, against whom he felt strongly because in the meeting with the president, August 13, the Nazi leader demanded all or nothing.

Industrialists Displeased.

Next it was necessary to induce Otto Meissner, the president's political adviser, to look more favorably on the Nazi chieftain.

Then large industrial groups of western Germany, who were displeased because the Nazis supported the recent traffic strike in Berlin and because they considered George Strasser, one of Hitler's chief lieutenants, to be Socialistic, had to be convinced that business need not fear Hitler.

Finally, the moment came for men having the president's ear, to tell him that the Nazi leader was not the terrible fellow some persons made him out.

The German arguments in answer to the new evidence to be presented will be that it is a recent fabrication.

The commission does not hear witnesses. All evidence is presented in the form of briefs and documents. The commission has ordered that the case be completely presented in three days.

A decision will be made soon after final arguments are done. When it is made the commission will have finished its work. In ten years it has decided 20,000 claims of American citizens and corporations for damages sustained from the World War.

Communist Groups Formed at U. of V.

Charlottesville Stirred by Student Reds Who Use Y.M.C.A. Quarters.

Special to The Washington Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 19.—The recent formation of a Communist study group at the University of Virginia and the fact that in the preelection poll of students and faculty members, conducted by College Topics, the student semiweekly, six members of the faculty cast their vote for Norman Thomas, the Socialist candidate, has caused no little comment here.

Heralded by a fanfare of chalked announcements before the more important buildings of the university, the Communist group came into being with the assistance of Madison Hall, the university Y. M. C. A. Request that the group be granted space in Madison Hall for its meetings was granted Palmer Weber, one of the Communist leaders, by Jere King, president of Madison Hall.

The initial meeting of the upholders of Communistic principles was held in the private study of the Madison Hall president. The group was first assigned the Bible study room, but on arriving there found a chess tournament in progress. Finally, however, they met in triumph and effected an organization, with the hope of interest, meetings, more organization and departed.

EUROPE TO PROTEST IF HOOVER SAYS PAY

huge Federal budget total, and prepared to tackle early this week the equally pressing problem of war debts.

Meanwhile from Capitol Hill came reiterated expressions of an adamant attitude against the recreation of the war debts commission, and against an extension of the moratorium. Should this view prevail, a demand by the United States for payments due on December 15 would be the only course available.

Both Mr. Hoover and President-elect Roosevelt, when they sit down together over the debt problem at the White House Tuesday, will have as a common ground an expressed belief against cancellation of the war obligations.

From high administration quarters has come word that the Chief Executive is definitely opposed to another one-year moratorium, and favors instead a more rigid attitude toward foreign debtors than any wholesale suspension of the payments due on December 15.

Hoover Aids Reticent.

How far Mr. Hoover will go in his discussion with Mr. Roosevelt of the requests of Great Britain, France and Belgium for renewed debt negotiations, neither he nor his aids have disclosed. Nor has any intimation been given of how big a part disarmament will play in the conversation.

It was learned yesterday that Dr. Julius Curtius, former German foreign minister, conferred while here with Chairman Borah, of the Senate foreign relations committee. He had previously called upon the President and Secretary Stimson.

The Chief Executive has said repeatedly that the question of German reparations must be entirely divorced from any American consideration of the war debt question.

Senator Watson (Republican), Indiana, one of the twelve congressional leaders called by the President to his parley on debts next Wednesday, said in Indianapolis yesterday he could count only four avenues out of the debt tangle, a three-year moratorium, revival of the debt commission, cancellation and repudiation.

France Able to Pay.

"Repudiation," he said, "has been discussed in European circles. I doubt, however, that they will go that far. France could pay if she would, for she has the world's largest gold reserve. She has leagued the other smaller nations into the present policy of delay. England wishes to pay and will pay if she can."

Secretary Mills, before newspapermen yesterday said that both he and the President "will be all prepped up" on debt matters by next Tuesday. He will participate in the parley with Mr. Roosevelt.

The Treasury Secretary said he hoped that Prof. Raymond Moley, who will sit with the President-elect, "will do some prepping, too." Mills and the New York Governor have known each other since they were "knee high," he said.

New Montgomery Judge Starts Work

Police Court Session Held by DeLashmutt After Taking Oath.

Montgomery County Police Court began functioning yesterday for the first time since October 25, when Judge Charles W. Woodward was appointed to the Circuit Court bench. Having received his commission from Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, the new judge of the police court, Donald A. DeLashmutt, of Rockville, was sworn in yesterday by Clerk of the Court Clayton K. Watkins, and started court.

The new judge found considerable work when he started as the cases have been piling up since Judge Woodward's resignation. He managed to get a large number of cases out of the way and will begin to hold regular court sessions this week.

Judge DeLashmutt was appointed justice of the peace at large for Montgomery County, designated as police court justice, for the unexpired term of Judge Woodward, or until May, 1933. The judge was felicitated by his fellow jurists and the bar and many other citizens.

PINCHOT COMMENDS ACCUSED FORESTER

Jones' Counsel Tells Pollard Defense Is Based Upon Proof of Ability.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Counsel for Chapin Jones, discharged State forester, today told Gov. Pollard that his client is alleging neither political considerations nor interference on the part of the conservation and development commission in his plea to be retained in office.

The counsel, Murray M. McGuiren, asserted that the forester's case was based entirely upon evidence that he does have energy and executive ability.

These assertions were drawn by questions put to the forester by Gov. Pollard, who for the second time interrupted the steady three-day flow of evidence piled up by Jones against the memorandum filed with the governor by Chairman William E. Carson, supplementing the order for the forester's dismissal. The commission chairman gave a "lack of executive energy and ability," as his reason for the order.

Character Commended.

The executive questions put in the midst of a two-hour period spent largely in the introduction of cumulative evidence, in letters commending the forester's character, scientific knowledge and executive ability. Outstanding among these letters was one from Gifford Pinchot, Governor of Pennsylvania.

Before the introduction of the Pinchot letter Gov. Pollard halted the introduction of written evidence to ask Jones, who requested the hearing, to show cause why he should not be removed from office, if interference on the part of the Conservation and Development Commission had impaired the efficiency of his work.

To this Jones replied that the change of two Wise County fire wardens, brought into the evidence with an executive question yesterday, was made over his objection. He added that the new Wise wardens had not been tested yet, inasmuch as there has been no fire season since the change was made.

Text of Pinchot's Letter.

The discharged forester said the commission caused him to retain one other county warden against his judgment. He said the warden was finally retained and reprimanded, and subsequently has done good work.

Answering another question by the governor, the forester said he considered himself bound legally and practically by any resolutions of the commission.

Mr. McGuire brought the "letter" evidence to a climax with the introduction of the communication from Gov. Pinchot. Dated less than a week ago, it said:

"May I take the liberty of writing to you (directed to Gov. Pollard) concerning Chapin Jones, employed as State forester of Virginia, with whose work I was acquainted while he was a member of the United States Forest Service at the time I happened to be the head.

"What I knew of him, and what I know of him now is all to his credit, and I take great pleasure in testifying to that effect."

Luray Police Say Firebug Is Active

Luray, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—What police described as the fourth incendiary fire of the week, last night damaged the home of Sam Stanley here.

The fire department, arriving two hours after being notified by Mrs. Stanley, who was awakened by the smoke, found oil-soaked waste beneath the weatherboarding. Two hours later the same house was set on fire in another place in the same manner.

The home of Gilbert Strickler, bank president, was set on fire earlier this week in much the same manner.

Middleburg Girl Off Soon To Congress of 4-H Clubs

Will Represent State at National Meeting in Chicago.

Special to The Washington Post.

As the winner of the State and county dress contest, Miss Ferguson will enter the national dress contest with other State winners.

Miss Ferguson's exhibit of a dress made by herself was selected as the best in the Loudoun dress contest held in Leesburg in June. There were 30 exhibits. Going to Blacksburg for the State contest she won over contestants from every part of the Old Dominion.

Miss Ferguson's dress was a cleverly designed and attractively made frock of mercerized yellow ginham trimmed with brown and with a brown jacket of the same material. The total cost of the outfit, including a handbag, was $1.05.

This is the second year in succession that Loudoun 4-H clubs have been represented at the National 4-H Congress, an honor shared by no other 4-H clubs in the State. Last year Miss Mary Alice Turman was the State's contestant for national health champion.

ARLINGTON ADVISED TO CUT WATER RATE

County Manager Submits Report on Status of Entire System.

ARLINGTON COUNTY.
BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 599 Clarendon, Va.

Submitting a comprehensive report on the county water system to the county board at its meeting yesterday, County Manager Roy S. Braden recommended a reduction to domestic users of from $6 a quarter to $5 a quarter for a minimum use of 10,000 gallons, to be effective January 1, 1933.

The report shows that there are 4,039 active users of water in the county. Of this number there are 3,938 domestic users and 101 commercial accounts. There is a total of 82.97 miles of water lines in the county.

It is further recommended that, effective December 31 next, all spigots on fire hydrants and drinking fountains at hydrants be removed. That bills shall be rendered quarterly for domestic service in the following manner:

The county to be divided into three sections and bills for one-third of the county shall be mailed out the first of each month, this "stagger" system to be effective January 1, 1933. Bills for one-third of the county shall be rendered January 1, for three months; for one-third of the county they shall be rendered on February 1, for four months; and for one-third of the county they shall be rendered on March 1, for five months; and beginning April 1, and each month thereafter, bills for one-third of the county shall be rendered for three months' service.

Bills for meter service to commercial users shall be rendered quarterly, on the first of January, April, July and October of each year.

That all bills for service must be paid in full within 30 days after the close of the quarter for which the bill was rendered or the service will be discontinued.

In submitting these recommendations, County Manager Braden says that he considers they will bring about a more satisfactory condition in the service and at the same time permit a more efficient service.

No action was taken by the board. Chairman Harry A. Fellows announced that consideration of the complete report will be given by the board at a special meeting in the near future.

Despite the fact that the county board at a recent public hearing on the application for the rezoning of the property of Harry Stewart, of Ballston, from residential to commercial did announce that a decision on the matter would be forthcoming at yesterday's meeting, the board refused to take action. It was announced by Chairman Fellows that, due to the absence of Mrs. Elizabeth Magruder, board member, due to illness, action on the matter would be deferred a few days.

No zoning matter that has come before the board for its consideration has caused such county-wide interest, due, it is said, to the fact that when it came before the zoning appeal board the application was denied. It was then carried back to the county board, who reversed the action of the zoning appeal board and granted the application. At the request of former Commonwealth's Attorney William C. Gloth the board reopened the case, granting a rehearing on the grounds that Gloth had new evidence to present. At this hearing Board Member John Gail was absent and the board witheld its decision until yesterday's meeting.

With the knowledge that no funds for county relief will be forthcoming this year from contributions of county residents employed in the Federal Government to the Washington Community Chest, Board Member Lyman M. Kelley brought to the board's attention the serious condition which is bound to confront the county this coming winter.

While no definite action was taken the board in an unofficial capacity appeals to the residents of the county to contribute to the county welfare board.

Declaring that the present county ordinance governing dumps in the county is practically worthless, Sheriff Howard B. Fields told the board that if it wants to put a stop to dumping in the county a new ordinance must be drafted without delay. He stated that he has complied to the letter with the instructions of the board to arrest violators of the dumping ordinance, but thus far this has not had any material effect.

Junior Red Cross Plans Cash Drive

Arlington Boys and Girls Show Great Interest in Relief Work.

The Arlington County Junior Red Cross, which last year enrolled more than 4,000 boys and girls in the county schools, is conducting its membership drive again this year during the annual roll call. Miss Gertrude Smith, chairman of the Junior Red Cross in Arlington County, and in charge of enrollment, expects an even larger membership than a year ago as a result of the interest taken in the relief work carried on among school children last winter.

More than $250 was contributed by members for relief work, and this money was used to purchase shoes and clothing for children who would otherwise have been compelled to stay out of school. Glasses were furnished several pupils unable to buy them and many other helpful activities were carried on.

The local chapter Red Cross chairman, George A. Collier, urges parents to encourage their children to join the junior organization and renew their old Red Cross membership. At least 1,500 Red Cross memberships must be obtained, he says, this year, or the relief work of the local chapter will have to be curtailed. About $800 was expended during the past year, mostly in aiding families or sick or disabled former veterans, and in providing food and other help to the unemployed.

Park Will Inherit Hoover Camp Soon

(Associated Press.)

President Hoover's picturesque mountain camp on Rapidan River soon will become part of the Shenandoah National Park.

Details of the transfer will be worked out tomorrow by William E. Carson, Virginia conservation commission chairman, and Lawrence Richey, secretary to the President. The 165 acres included in the President's tract already has been awarded the State in condemnation proceedings, but actual transfer has not been consummated.

Eventually all the lands in the park area will be turned over by Virginia to the Government. The camp, where President Hoover entertained Prime Minister MacDonald, of England, three years ago, and many other dignitaries since, was offered by the President for inclusion in the park, with the view of making it a permanent retreat for Presidents.

Lengthy discussion was had on the plans of Ashton C. Jones, member of the local board and president-elect of the Virginia Real Estate Association, for increased activity of the State Association and local boards, particularly in matters pertaining to property owners and the manner in which real estate dealers may be of most service to them.

BROTHERS ATTACKED AND BEATEN BY MOB

Court Orders Liberation of 14 Strikers in Illinois Mine War Area.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The friction between Illinois coal miners' factions dropped in and out of court dockets today.

Christian County Circuit Judge Franklin R. Dove ordered the freedom of fourteen progresive miners arrested by National Guardsmen during recent disorders in that region, while at Springfield warrants were sworn out charging three miners with attacking three brothers who were on their way to work at Peabody Mine No. 7, at Kincaid, in Christian County.

The charges were filed by two of the brothers, Art and Robert Nichols, who with another brother, Myron, were accosted and beaten by a band of about 30 masked men inside the Sangamon County line. Roberts was grazed by a bullet in the scalp. The brothers said they recognized three of the men and officials were searching for them.

At the Peabody's cora mine, in Sangamon County, most recent of the shifting trouble zones, more than 100 diggers returned to work as sheriff's deputies and State highway police repulsed about 200 pickets.

Pickets chalked up a victory when they prevented opening of the Capitol mine, a Peabody property near here. Numbering about 500, they met and dissuaded all but a few miners from going into the shaft.

Peabody officials announced that a third mine, at Riverton, employing about 500 men, would open Monday.

Rebel Yell in Peril Of Becoming Lost

U. D. C. Finds Difficulty in Obtaining Record for Posterity.

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The rebell yell, battle cry of the Confederate Army, may be preserved only in memory. Putting it on a phonograph record apparentl is too expensive, Mrs. B. F. Baird, of Philadelphia, reported at the closing business session of the thirty-ninth convention of United Daughters of the Confederacy here today.

Other obstacles Mrs. Baird said she encountered were the brevity of the yell and the increasing dimculty of finding enough old soldiers who could give the cry. The convention instructed her to continue her efforts to obtain a recording and to prepare a history of the yell for reproduction with it.

The final session of the convention, originally scheduled for tonight, was held this afternoon.

Garbo in Denmark After Paris Visit

Eludes Photographers on Train Returning to Sweden.

Copenhagen, Denmark, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Returning from visits in London and Paris, Greta Garbo left on a ferry tonight for Sweden, where she has been staying with relatives.

The movie actress spent only three hours in Denmark. Windows of her parlor railway car were covered when it was shunted on board the ferry to foil photographers seeking to snap her picture. She was unwilling to discuss her future plans.

Miss Garbo slipped out of Stockholm a couple of weeks ago and turned up in London, where, with the aid of a disguise, she did some sightseeing. Later she promenaded on the boulevards of Paris, wearing a black wig and horn-rimmed spectacles. She left Paris after her disguise was penetrated and movie fans besieged her.

Carbon monoxide, given off by the motor exhaust asphyxiated him, according to H. P. Brown, Campbell County coroner.

CHEST REACHES $1,179,565 BUT IS FAR BEHIND QUOTA

that the funds subscribed to date will take care of 48,750 of these unfortunate people needing help and will leave 51,250 persons hungry, unsheltered, unclothed, unattended in illness or otherwise without help given by the Community Chest organizations.

"This must not be. We, the citizens of the Capital of the greatest Nation on earth today, dare not permit our city to fail in its obligations to the destitute within our boundaries. We dare not permit the world to know that Washington has failed to take care of its own. Regardless of the amount of labor involved, regardless of the time it takes, regardless of weather or any conditions that may arise, we must reach our goal by next Wednesday night.

"While we get much encouragement from the generous gifts of many people and the fine spirit that is shown, it is quite clear that many others do not appreciate the fact that the Community Chest is a federation of 63 organizations making a combnied appeal. There are too many gifts on the basis of what the individual would give to almost any organization that came along, rather than upon a basis of a total of what would be given to each of the 63 organizations in the Chest if they came up in separate campaigns."

Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the late President Wilson and an indefatigable worker for the Commupity Chest, was the principal speaker of the day. Mr. Tumulty made a wonderful appeal to those who "stand before cold hearts and beat upon their doors," telling them that upon thier efforts depends the success of the Chest. Mr. Tumulty said in part:

"On an occasion like this, so thrilling, so fraught with great human interest and emotion, I crave a great power—a power so great that I wish that I could move the mountains of selfishness that, like barriers, bar our way to the realization of the needs that lie behind the efforts of the Community Chest. I wish I could put into the tones of my voice notes of tenderness, notes of appreciation for all that you are doing for the lonely and the forlorn and those upon whose backs are great burdens. And I wish, too, that I could put into my voice a note of human appeal that might reach those who live upon a lonely promontory of selfishness and forgetfulness and ask them to come with you and me down into the great valleys of the human need, where men, women and children are crying out to us in pathetic voices not to desert them and not to forget them.

"I have been traveling around the country recently making selfish speeches, and now I am glad that I am associated with the greatest political party in the world—composed of Republicans as well as Democrats, Catholics as well as Protestants, Jews as well as Gentiles—who are taking cognizance of the needs of human beings. I wish we could go up onto some high mountainside and look down on the surging mass of humanity and see them in their needs and take cognizance of the needs of humanity.

Happiness From Service.

"One of the most thrilling things about the Community Chest is that it brings hearts and souls together at the great crossroads, and the thing that we discover in the Community Chest is this: that nothing from the outside adds one whit to a man's moral status. Men and women are made great by the wells that lie within them, out of which rises the power to help humans in distress. Happiness and joy everlasting come from serving those less unfortunate than yourselves.

"So, my friends, you and I of the Community Chest stand today before these cold hearts and are beating on their doors and asking them to come with us to serve in this great cause, which is the cause that involves the restoration of the faith of men, women and children, without which nations die."

In introducing the honor guests of the day, Chairman Noyes paid a special tribute to the motion picture theater operators of Washington, through whose courtesy the film, "The Inner Voice," is being shown in every theater in Washington. He pronounced it one of the finest pieces of publicity he had ever seen and reiterated his thanks to the theater men present for their cooperation. He then introduced Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. William DeWitt Mitchell, wife of the United States Attorney General; Mrs. Lewis W. Douglas, vice president of the Junior League; A. Julian Brylawski, Warner Brothers; John J. Payette, district manager for Warner Brothers; Carter Barron, Washington representative of Loew's Theaters, and Sidney Lust, of the Sidney Lust Theater Corporation. He also introduced as an honor guest B. B. Burgunder, of S. Kann's Sons Co.

Sunday Solicitation Urged.

Following the reports by the various units, Chairman Noyes again reiterated his request that every possible effort be made to take advantage of the Sabbath which would find people at home and would give the Metropolitan Unit an opportunity to present the case of the Community Chest to these people.

Throngs of people assembled around Jelleff's store on F street yesterday afternoon, attracted by a "magic window" installed by W. P. Kennedy, general manager of Lumenix, in which is shown a realistic picture, comprising a fade-out of a woman searching a bare cupboard for food, while on the other side appears a Community Chest solicitor pouring money into the Community Chest and stating that "to fill this cupboard, you must fill this Chest."

Firms pledging 100 per cent reported yesterday were:

Anacostia Bank, Children's Hospital, B. Rich's Sons, Washington Mechanics Savings Bank, Olmstead Grill, National Headquarters Office of Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Nelson Furniture Co., District of Columbia Department of Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Franc E. Sheiry Printing Co., Neighborhood House, Joseph Gawler Sons, Inc., Kur Jewelry Co., and Southern Hotel Supply Co.

Churches in Washington have been asked to observe a second Community Chest Sunday today in order that speakers may reach every religious organization with their message, according to an announcement yesterday by Mrs. John Jay O'Connor, chairman of the speakers' bureau.

E. C. Graham, prseident of the Chest, has written to the pastors of all churches, asking them to permit speakers again to address their congregations today.

In his letter, Mr. Graham stressed the fact that latest reports show clearly that the campiagn will end half a million short of its goal, unless the people of Washington awake to the great need surrounding them. He asked the churches to emphasize the need for contributions from housewives and children, under the "few cents a day" plan.

SAVANT SAYS COMET HIT CLIFF DWELLERS

Arizona Investigation Held to Show How Ancient Civilization Died.

Los Angeles, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A theory that an early American civilization—the Arizona cliff dwellers—was wiped out by collision of the earth with the so-called Arizona meteor, or comet, was advanced today by Ernest V. Sutton, of South Pasadena, Calif., student of Indian culture of the Southwest.

Some 400,000,000 tons of stratified rock were displaced by the collision, which created an oval-shaped crater with walls 130 feet higher than the surrounding plain. These walls slope down 600 feet on the inside to a 40-acre floor. The crater extends 225 miles in all directions, near Holbrook.

Sutton suggested that in the twinkling of an eye this crash destroyed the most populous and most cultivated settlement of what now is the United States.

Evidence of Mummies.

Scientists believe the great meteor or comet cut diagonally across North America from the Northeast at about 40 miles a second, the nucleus plunging slantwise some 2,500 feet into the surface of Arizona, while the meteorites, cosmic dust and gases wrought havoc all around.

"With my own eyes," said Sutton, "I have seen mummified human beings sitting upright inside ruined buildings, as if something had suddenly sucked the life out of them.

"In a tumble-down cliff house, near the great beehive dwelling known as Yucca House, there were three aged adults and a child. The adults sat with their backs to the wall—the child lay on the floor. I believe the cataclysm occurred during the daytime, when hunters were on the ranges and all the younger women were in the fields."

Placed Before Columbus.

The main mass of the celestial remains has been uncovered at a cost of a million dollars in explorations extending over many years. It is more than 400 feet in diameter.

Ransome Sutton, newspaper science writer, who has been studying results of exploration work, suggests the body was a real comet instead of a meteor. Agreement with this view is expressed by Dr. Deth B. Nicholson, of Mount Wilson Astronomical Observatory, of Pasadena, who said "so far as any one knows, it had all the characteristics and pecularities of a comet."

Jobless Insurance Chief Labor Issue

Split Appears in A. F. of L. on Eve of National Convention.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The controversial problem of unemployment insurance came to the fore today as the principal issue to be brought before the annual national convention of the American Federation of Labor when it convenes here Monday.

While the federation last year frowned upon unemployment insurance as "unnecessary and un-American," the leaders this year are prepared to take the initiative in proposing an insurance plant to the delegates.

Meanwhile, a group terming itself as "rank and file" delegates reached the convention site with its own idea of a plan whereby the cost of unemployment insurance would be borne jointly by the government and employers.

This group—a so-called "left wing"—plans to call a rump convention Tuesday in the interests of its insurance program and to advocate sharp reductions in the salaries of the federation's executive officers.

Six Dead in Colombia After Storm and Flood

Bogota, Colombia, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Six persons were reported killed or drowned and more than a score injured today when floods followed a terrific rainfall and hailstorm. More than 50 houses in Bogota were destroyed and hundreds of persons were homeless.

It was feared more deaths would be revealed in excavations of ruins. Traffic was paralyzed in the city for more than an hour and police were unable to answer calls for assistance. Three children were among the persons reported to have lost their lives.

Sailor Dies When Used Car Loses Drive Shaft

Laguna Beach, Calif., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—C. Hadnash, 21, of Wheeling W. Va., a seaman aboard the U. S. S. New York, was killed near Coffeeshell Beach today when the drive shaft fell out of a newly purchased used motor car, causing it to strike a concrete wall.

M. W. Picot, of Norfolk, Va., and B. F. Cockrell, of San Diego, both 21, and also stationed aboard the New York, were injured. The sailors were on a furlough trip to San Diego.

Moors Attack Grounded Spanish Fishing Crew

Madrid, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—When the fishing ship Dos Corazones grounded about 30 miles south of Cape Juby, near Rio de Oro, West Africa, the crew of eight men was attacked by Moors, radio dispatches received today said.

Swift action by crews of other fishing boats and a government mail boat were reported to have saved the men from injury and brought the fight to a sudden end.

Three Lepers Escape in Bucharest.

Vienna, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Press reports today said three lepers were at large in Bucharest after escaping from the isolation colony at Tigilesti. The report said the trio presented a protest to the ministry of health against alleged defective hospitalization, but before the police learned they were in town they disappeared.

Salvage Gold Given to Needy.

Rome, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Capt. Quaglia of the salvage vessel Artiglio which took more than $600,000 in gold out of the sunken steamer Egypt, today presented 1,000 gold sovereigns of that money to the secretary of the Fascist party for use in relief work among Italy's needy.

SHAFT IS DEDICATED TO WRIGHTS' GENIUS

Notables Brave Raging Gale to Attend Ceremony at Kitty Hawk.

Kitty Hawk, N. C., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—State and national dignitaries, standing on the spot where Orville and Wilbur Wright flew the world's first motor-driven airplane, faced a southwest gale here today to dedicate a monument to that achievement. The monument is a 90-foot granite pylon, with a beacon at its peak. The gale once grew so strong the ceremonies had to be halted for half an hour.

Coast Guard planes, Army and Navy airships and other planes droned overhead as visible demonstration of the result of the Wrights' pioneering experiments, but the giant dirigible Akron was not able to come because of the weather.

Arrangements had been made to handle 20,000 persons, but heavy rains throughout the night and most of the morning cut the attendance to a bare thousand, and hundreds of these sat in automobiles far from the speakers' stand as the storm raged.

Orville Wright Present.

Hardly had the exercises been completed when the sun came out, and the weather was clear as honor guests of the occasion gathered at Carolina Beach for a luncheon given by the Kill Devil Hill Memorial Association.

Orville Wright, surviving brother of the pair which started aviation toward its present advanced place on December 17, 1903, was present.

He renewed acquaintanceships with residents of the Carolina Banks, who were here when he and his brother first experimented with their box-kite glider and then with their motor-driven plane.

Hurley Chief Speaker.

Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War, paid tribute to the genius of the Wright brothers, classing them as among "America's immortal sons," in the principal address of the occasion.

"In honoring these two pathfinders, we should recognize in their achievement the spirit of America that made their inventions possible," Hurley said.

J. C. B. Ehringhaus, of Elizabeth City, Governor-elect of North Carolina, and Representative Lindsay Warren, of the First North Carolina District, also spoke, each paying tribute to the Wrights and their achievements.

Huntsmen Are Reminded Of Maryland Regulations

James W. Rogers, Deputy Game Warden for Prince Georges County, Outlines List of Laws to Invalidate Possible Pleas of Ignorance.

With the Maryland hunting season going full blast, James W. Rogers, deputy game warden for Prince Georges County, has taken time off from his patrol of the hunting fields to warn the county Nimrods to obey the law. And to invalidate their possible pleas that they were ignorant of the law he has outlined the regulations covering shooting in the Maryland fields and on the Maryland waters.

The season for rabbit, quail, pheasant, squirrel and wild turkey opened on November 15, last Tuesday, and will continue until December 31. The next day, November 16, the goose and duck season opened, to run until December 15. Raccoons and opossum also can be hunted now legally, the season having opened on November 1 to run until January 31, while the woodcock season, running from November 10 to December 10, is also now on. Hunters whose tastes run to waterfowl are likewise allowed to shoot Wilson's snipe, or jacksnipe, the season being November 1 to January 15.

The nearby county has no open season on deer, reedbirds, gulls, herons and all other shore birds with the exceptions set out above. There are also certain restrictions, bag limits and so forth, on the game which is allowed. Raccoons and opossum can not be trapped with steel traps, and trees in which they take refuge can not be cut down except with the consent of the owner of the land.

Hunters are also advised not to forget to take out their licenses, as fines for violations of the game laws are considerably higher than the license fees. A nonresident game license costs $15.50, unless the applicant owns Maryland property assessed at more than $500. A nonresident fishing license costs $1.50.

County residents get off somewhat easier, their game license being only $5.50 for the whole State, or $1.25 for a permit good only in one county. Their fishing licenses cost $1.25. Permanent residents on the Government reservation at Indian Head, Md., are allowed to get resident licenses for Charles County.

No licenses are required for a property owner or tenant hunting or fishing on his own land or on land he rents. Persons under 16 do not need a fishing license, but over that age they must have one to angle above tidewater. A hunting license can not be issued to a person under 14 without the written consent of his parent or guardian. Hunting licenses must be sewed in the middle of the back of the hunting coat, and buttons issued with fishing licenses must be displayed while engaged in the sport.

Nonresident licenses to shoot ducks and geese from a brush blind are not issued except to persons who own Maryland property. A resident license costs $5.50 for each blind built. However, persons who own property along the Potomac, whether residents or not, may obtain licenses, as may other nonresidents whose Maryland real estate is valued at more than $500.

The bag limits are as follows: One wild turkey per day, with not more than 4 per season; 2 pheasants or grouse per day, and not more than 6 per season; 6 rabbits, 10 squirrels, 10 quail, 4 woodcock, 25 doves, 20 jacksnipe, 15 ducks, or 4 geese per day. Waterfowl may be possessed legally during the first 10 days of the closed season, but not more than 30 ducks and 8 geese may be in the possession of one person at any one time.

No waterfowl may be exported from the State, except that a hunter is allowed to take out two days' bag limit as his personal luggage. However, not more than 30 ducks or 8 geese may be taken out in any one week. The sale is also forbidden in the State of quail, grouse, wild turkey, pheasants and other migratory game birds. Mr. Rogers also pointed out, for the benefit of hunters from blinds, that Federal regulations forbid the use of more than ten live-goose decoys at any blind. It is also forbidden to shoot doves near where grain or salt has been scattered.

Man Found Guilty In Woman's Death

Former Convict Must Go to Chair for Slaying Benefactress.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—John (Red) Downing was convicted late today of first degree murder without mercy for the slaying of his benefactress, Mrs. Mauree Bonzo, wife of the parole and record clerk at Ohio State Penitentiary. The verdict makes death in the electric chair mandatory.

Downing, a former convict, killed a woman in Cincinnati some years ago. At that time he was sentenced to a life term after throwing himself on the mercy of the court. The sentence was commuted, and upon his release he was befriended by the Bonzos, who gave him odd jobs about their home.

On October 25 Downing went to the Bonzo home and slew Mrs. Bonzo by beating her over the head with a bottle. He pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, but doctors testified he was sane. The jury deliberated 4 hours and 30 minutes. Formal sentence was deferred pending a motion for a new trial.

UTILITY PROBE HIT BY LACK OF FUNDS

McCulloch Declares Larger Appropriation Needed if Work Is Completed.

(Associated Press.)

Pointing to a depleted treasury, the Trade Commission yesterday informed the Senate that lack of funds may prevent it from making as thorough an investigation as desired of the financial set-up of public utility companies.

Whether an additional appropriation will be sought at the forthcoming session of Congress was not made known. It was explained that would depend laregly on the attitude of members of Congress.

The Senate-ordered inquiry was begun in February, 1928, and public utility companies in every section of the Nation have come under the commission's scrutiny. Efforts are being made to complete it by next June 30, the end of the present fiscal year.

A brief paragraph in a report to the Senate on the progress of the investigation gave the commission's views as to the future.

Money Scarce.

"Because of lack of money," it said, "the commission will be unable to examine several important groups coming within the terms of Senate resolution 83 and to make as complete an examination as seems desirable of certain others which have been partially studied to date."

The appropriation for the present fiscal year was $1,436,000, which compared with $1,810,054 for the previous year the commission asked $1,627,418.

"We are going to make the money go as far as possible and make the investigation as complete as possible," Commissioner Edgar A. McCulloch told newspapermen. "We don't know yet how far our funds will take us."

Two Near Completion.

McCulloch, who has presided at the hearings since the investigation began, said the inquiry into the Associated Gas & Electric Corporation would be completed. He also thought the Cities Service Co. would be examined.

The commission is now receiving testimony concerning the New England Gas & Electric Association, a member of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. system. The hearings will be resumed tomorrow after a week-end recess.

When the inquiry is completed, the commission will report to the Senate whether any evils have been found in the companies which makes additional legislation desirable.

ARGENTINA'S POLICY.

After having refused to co-operate with other American republics in employing a neutral commission to labor for adjustment of the Chaco dispute between Bolivia and Paraguay, the government of Argentina now refuses to agree to the plan conceived by the commission. This plan provides for sending a commission to the fighting ground, to make certain that the agreement of the two disputants to suspend hostilities is observed in good faith, pending resort to arbitration. If either party should be found to persist in hostilities, the commission would be empowered to declare it the aggressor, whereupon the American republics would be invited to suspend diplomatic and consular relations with the offender.

The Argentine government refuses to concur in this plan, intimating that it is an attempt at coercion and intervention. In its note to the neutral commission Argentina refers to a shadowy project broached by it some months ago, apparently intended to be a substitute for the course of action approved by all the other republics. In the meantime Argentine officials are cultivating the idea of giving the League of Nations jurisdiction over the Chaco dispute.

The neutral commission acts under the authority of the nations composing the Pan American Union. The commission is made up of representatives of Uruguay, Colombia, Mexico, Cuba and the United States. Argentina declined a place on the commission. This commission has worked with unceasing patience and fairness in endeavoring to prevent hostilities, and has been supported by all the republics except Argentina. While that government gives lip service to the commission, its failure to cooperate has been a factor in delaying the negotiations.

The neutral commission has reminded Argentina that acceptance by Bolivia and Paraguay of the plan to send a commission to the Chaco under the terms proposed gives full warrant for the application of the remedy in the event of further hostilities. The commission reiterates the intention of the American republics to make every effort in behalf of peace.

It is unfortunate that the government of Argentina finds it to its interest to disagree with other nations of this hemisphere in the prosecution of plans which they approve, looking to good relations and pacific settlement of disputes between them.

SENATOR WESLEY L. JONES.

The death of Senator Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, is attributable to overwork. With the single exception of Senator Smoot, of Utah, the Washington senator had no rival in incessant industry. He was chairman of the committee on appropriations, and in this capacity was expected to familiarize himself with all the expenditures of the Government. He not only did this, but was a leader in devising plans for retrenchment and economy. This task involved months of drudgery, claiming and receiving no public acclaim, but gaining the honor of serving the country faithfully and well. No member of the Senate was more highly respected by his colleagues than Wesley L. Jones. They are in a position to appreciate the patriotic devotion with which he labored.

The tax upon the physical endurance of senators in certain committees is too heavy for the strength of the ordinary man. How Senator Smoot has managed to survive is one of the modern wonders. The late Senator Warren, of Wyoming, bore the burden of the appropriations committee to an advanced age, but he was a giant in strength. Senator Jones had been weakened by a serious operation several years ago, but he persisted in his work, and then actively participated in the recent strenuous campaign. He dies at the age of 69, many years too soon.

OUR OLDEST FESTIVAL.

This is Thanksgiving week. The anniversary falls upon the earliest possible date this year, the 143rd since the Congress of 1789 requested President Washington to set aside a day "of public Thanksgiving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God." It was in many ways fitting that President Hoover's proclamation this year should repeat the Thanksgiving message to the young nation from the first President.

Conditions in America are vastly different from those confronting the struggling nation in those early years of independence, yet with all the evident growth in area, population and material wealth, new problems arise calling in large measure for the same spirit of devotion to the fatherland as in that formative period. Washington was concerned in his message with questions of war and peace and the complex questions which must concern a new government. The passing of one complete century and nearly the third of another does not greatly alter man's duties, either in public or private action.

Washington's proclamation enjoins a spirit of devotion, of hope and courage in the face of grave responsibilities. These admonitions are as timely today as they were in the closing years of the eighteenth century. Apprehension that the nation might lack the essentials of life have changed to problems in the distribution of super-abundance, but the solution is no less vital to the general welfare. America stands in no immediate danger from foreign aggression today, but the domestic social and economic structure calls for betterments and safeguards which require the cooperation of all good elements of society.

This is a week in which Americans everywhere are being asked to provide for the needy and ailing of the nation, that there may be no actual suffering from lack of food and shelter during the coming winter. The season of Thanksgiving is one in which all citizens who still are blessed with something beyond the comforts of life cheerfully assist the less fortunate to the full extent of their ability.

TIGHTEN UP HOUSE RULES.

A movement is reported to be underway for revision of the rules of the House of Representatives. When the Republican party was in control of the House, a great deal of complaint about "gag rules" was heard from the Democratic minority. Consequently, when Representative Garner stepped into the Speaker's chair the rules were liberalized. In view of the previous criticism from Democratic leaders, they could not have taken any other course with consistency.

Now it appears that the Democratic leaders are dissatisfied with their liberal rules. On several occasions in the last session the House broke completely away from control by the majority leaders and passed measures that became very embarrassing to the Democratic party. Since control of the entire Government will pass into Democratic hands on March 4, leaders of that party are considering precautions to avoid future revolts among undisciplined members of the House.

So-called liberal rules in the House put a premium on bloc action. A strong admixture of politics and liberal rules enables a minority to block or pass legislation. When a minority can force consideration of a bill at a crucial moment many weak-kneed congressmen dare not vote against it and the bill may be passed, even though it is contrary to the best judgment of the majority. That is substantially what happened in the case of the bonus bill in the last session. It was repudiated by the ways and means committee, and brought up on the floor by a petition to which 145 members had fixed their signatures. If a majority vote had been required to discharge the committee from consideration of this bill, it would not have been passed. But when forced to a record vote by a minority, many members lacked the courage to oppose it.

Leaders in the House may expect support from the people in amending the rules to make a recurrence of this and similar episodes impossible. Any legislative body with 435 members needs strict rules to keep it operating smoothly and to save it from demoralization by selfish blocs and minorities. In the Seventy-third Congress the Democratic party will have no formidable opposition from the Republicans, but the groups which were in operation this year will still be present. A tightening up of rules may be essential to keep them from running wild.

Only a minority party delights in defective rules that permit it to upset the program of the majority. It is the responsibility of the party in control to lay down such rules as will permit it to carry out its pledges to the people without grave dangers of frustration by blocs and minorities. Constructive leadership can be made effective only through reasonably stringent rules.

"BACK TO THE LAND."

Movements to relieve jobless men by sending them "back to the farm" have brought a decided back-kick from agricultural areas and from experts in the use of land. "It is our measured judgment," says a current report from the national land use committees, "that a wholesale, unguided back-to-the-land movement is the poorest possible solution for the unemployment problem." Farmers may well be resentful of any schemes to accentuate their troubles by sending unemployed men from the cities to increase competition on the farm.

The committee of experts on land use points out that agriculture has been in depression for ten years. The buying power of the farmer has been crippled by overproduction which has resulted in extremely low prices for crops of all kinds. Certainly this is no time to settle more people upon farms, thus increasing agricultural production. A concerted movement back to the farm might "permanently affect all hope of agricultural stability and prosperity." Before agriculture is ready to absorb a vast army of unemployed workers from the cities it must find a market to dispose of crops that are now rotting in the ground for want of demand.

Personal difficulties always arise when attempts are made to transfer industrial workers to farms. As a rule the unemployed have no capital, no equipment, and very little training in the production of crops or farm management. Since no free land fit for cultivation is available, and the supply of farm hands far exceeds the demand already, opportunities for would-be farmers from the cities are extremely limited. The chances for reabsorbing the industrial unemployed into economic pursuits to which they are accustomed are far more promising than are the prospects for successful farming. Families that go back to the land can hope for little more than subsistence, and frequently they can not win that much.

The committee asks for enactment of the McNary resolution authorizing Federal agencies to cooperate with State and local agencies in advising individuals as to specific opportunities for settlement on land. The first effect of such a measure would be to discourage the back-to-the-land movement that is now under way.

BUYING GOOD WILL.

Suppose we rebuff them. Imagine our Government insisting brusquely upon the letter of its bond. What would be the result? Obviously an immense loss to this country of good-will abroad.—New York Times.

Suppose the debtors should brusquely insist upon paying. What would be the result? Obviously, an immense increase of American good will toward them.

Japan accuses the United States of setting up the puppet state of Panama. If she will now run a world canal through Manchukuo the parallel will hold.

POST HASTE

Our Son of York will not have much opportunity to summerize this winter, but there will still be some discontent next March that will need attention.

There is bound to be some bright lad in Congress who will think up a new trick, like attaching a beer rider to a tax bill.

Democracy is expensive. The Press Club's informal dinner for Gov. Roosevelt is a five-buck setback for the boys, but they will get to see Jim Farley, too.

A sales tax which would increase the cost of purchases for 20,000,000 of the population 5 cents a day, for 20,000,000 10 cents a day, and for 10,000,000 20 cents a day, would yield $1,500,000,000 in 300 days. Who couldn't stand it?

The commendable suggestion is now made that the Home Loan Bank act be modified by Congress so that some loans can be made on homes.

The first organization vote in the Senate should make interesting disclosures as to how many Progressive Republicans were transformed by the election into Retrogressive Democrats.

By Thanksgiving the Cabinet, present and future executives and congressmen will have conferred on international debts. What will Europe give for the answer now?

The conscience content of many congressional minds apparently could be stretched considerably if they did not know that those of the Supreme Court can not.

From a purely philological viewpoint, if it hadn't been for American dough and American doughboys what language would the allied nations be speaking?

In this modern reversal of things it should be noted that Amy Johnson is now sorry she beat her husband so badly.

It might also be called a sails tax to raise the wind for the Ship of State when the income steam pressure is low.

Gov. Roosevelt has issued a Thanksgiving proclamation and no one will question its sincerity.

What would the Humane Society do to anybody who made nice college boys work in the mud as hard as they play football?

It sounds lots more statesmanlike for a lame-duck to say he accepts the election mandate of the people than to admit he is going to flop on prohibition.

Legislators need another guess if they think the Budweiser boys will have no kick coming if the beer is the same way.

AS SEEN BY EUROPE

Comment From London, Paris and Rome on American Election and Probable Foreign Policy.

London Times Editorial.

Mr. Roosevelt is perhaps fortunate that, in accordance with the constitutional procedure of the United States, it will be nearly four months before he is inaugurated as President and assumes responsibility for the administration. It will be a tremendous responsibility. If he is not to disappoint the hopes of the Nation which has so unsparingly condemned his predecessor for failing to stem the tide of depression, he must solve the riddle of its cause, or rather its causes, and unflinchingly apply the appropriate remedies no matter what interests or sections he may offend. He will have need of all his courage, for he will have to grapple with problems—political, economic and financial—over which all those whose business it is to understand them are hopelessly at variance.

In other countries which are shut out geographically from any hope of self-sufficiency the fundamental problem is obscured. Many plausible explanations may be found for the breakdown of trade in Europe, parceled out as it is into small departments, none of which can hope to be self-supporting, but which none the less have shut themselves off from one another by high tariff walls and which are set at cross purposes by national dislikes and suspicions. But these explanations do not apply to the United States. * * * What is the explanation that in such a country the farmers and the manufacturers can not exchange their products, that food is unsalable while millions of factory workers are idle and starving, and that the farmer has to go without the goods which they should be employed in making?

It is for Mr. Roosevelt to discover the causes of this disastrous collapse of the machinery of exchange and distribution and to strive to build it up again. If he fails he will be condemned as Mr. Hoover has just been condemned.

The interest taken on this side of the Atlantic in the welfare of the United States is not mere altruism. * * * The return of prosperity, even of comparative prosperity, in the United States will contribute to the recovery of the rest of the world, just as the restoration of more stable conditions elsewhere will contribute to the recovery of America.

All the world, therefore, will follow with anxious and most sympathetic interest Mr. Roosevelt's efforts to cope with the gigantic task awaiting him. It is not to be expected that the change in the Presidency will be followed by any notable change in the American foreign policy. Mr. Hoover and his Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, have worked ungrudgingly for disarmament and for international cooperation. They have had always to bear in mind both the specific interests of their own country, which they were bound to place first, and the effect of any projected measure on American public opinion. There is every reason to believe that Mr. Roosevelt, and whoever may succeed Mr. Stimson as Secretary of State, will work with equal devotion for the same causes.

On one point only is there any visible sign of a difference. Mr. Hoover somehow never seemed to realize—at any rate he never admitted openly—that international debts can only be paid in goods and services, and that prohibitive tariffs in the United States, shutting out foreign goods and forcing foreign countries to endeavor to pay their debts in gold, were at the least a contributing cause in the dislocation of international exchanges and in all the evil results which have followed from it. Mr. Roosevelt and still more Mr. Al Smith, whose ideas are entitled to a certain influence upon the policy of the new administration, have shown a more obvious appreciation of the connection between debts and tariffs. They have even proclaimed the necessity of taking it into consideration in negotiations with the debtor nations. It is not unreasonable to hope, therefore, that the world economic conference when it assembles need not be stultified from the outset by the maintenance of the ban imposed on the discussion of war debts and tariff rates. Such a discussion might well lead to agreements calculated to stabilize international exchanges and to revive international trade.

THE FRENCH VIEWPOINT.
Paris Correspondence of the London Times.

The two points in the program of the new President which are of greatest importance to France are the allied questions of tariffs and war debts. Since war debts have hardly figured in the campaign, little guidance is afforded, but from the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is closely associated with a large body of experts whose views on this question are in the direction of a more liberal treatment of the problem than was possible during the Hoover regime, it is expected that the whole matter will be taken up in a different spirit.

Although Mr. Roosevelt declared himself opposed to cancellation the possibilities of a revision were not ruled out, and while the ultimate decision rests with Congress it is expected that a Democratic Congress would follow a definite lead from the President. It is too early to devote any consideration to the aspirations put forward in the French press that war debts might be treated as reparations were treated at Lausanne—on the basis of a final payment for settlement in full.

Most of all, France welcomes the departure from prohibition with the possibilities of a revival of the French wine export trade to America.

ITALIAN HOPES.
Rome Correspondence of the London Times.

It is not expected here that the United States foreign policy will be substantially changed by the election of Mr. Roosevelt. At the same time it is hoped that Mr. Roosevelt's attitude toward both prohibition and the tariff question may result in benefits not only to Italy, but to the world in general. Expectations are also entertained that Mr. Roosevelt will show himself more tractable in regard to the repayment of war debts than he dared to be during his electoral campaign. His attitude toward tariffs and the necessity of sweeping away the obstacles to a more normal flow of international commerce will, it is thought, be reinforced by the logic of facts, and consequently strong hopes are felt that Signor Mussolini's recent appeal to the United States will not remain unanswered.

THANKSGIVING.

NEW WORLD ERA.

By BENITO MUSSOLINI, as reported by Fredericka Blanker in North American Review.

The world is already entering upon tomorrow, but for the most part its governments and its discussions are of yesterday. True, the problems remaining to us from yesterday must be solved before we can advance, but they must be solved with the viewpoint of tomorrow. We keep trying to apply the solutions of yesterday and they do not fit, for they are too puny and complex for the newer, simpler, greater world into which we are evolving.

The present crisis is not a period of alternation within an epoch. It is the beginning of transition to another era. The world is making ready for a new order—it has outgrown the old. Part of the past is dying, much is dead, and the future is being born. The peoples of the world are beginning to awaken to a sense of new values, something new within themselves that has been lying dormant until now. These new values and forces are mainly spiritual. It is the task of the leaders of the world to assist evolution. They must discover what the new forces are, they must be brave enough to discard what is already dead or dying, and to devise systems in which the new is actively substituted for the old. Many of the difficulties with which we are struggling are confusions of the issue and are not the real problem.

Man's wants continue to be the same as they have always been, but he is beginning to realize that he will have to find another way to obtain them. The masses already know the answer within themselves. They realize that it is not by fighting that they can get what they want, but by working—by team-working, in which the United States is so able—that is, by cooperation.

CLOVER.

Wherever the first clover blooms,
With honey in its heart,
Golden bees will find the way
To ply their ancient art.

No winter's ever long enough
To breed forgetfulness,
To make the clover selfish
Or the bee love less.

Nations forget their pacts
And men go separate;
No tie like this exists
In any State.

Cycles of years go on
Into millenniums,
And still where clover blooms
The gold bee comes.

Spain Giving Dons' Land To Peasants

Grandees Fight Proposed Reward to Poor for Their Loyalty to Republic.

MADRID, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A land grant estimated way up in the hundred millions constitutes the prize which the present administration hopes to offer Spanish peasants as reward for their adhesion to the republic.

An inventory board appointed by the treasury department is listing lands of the aristocracy, making ready to distribute arable acres among the people under the recently approved agrarian reform law.

Former grandees and other aristocrats, who received their properties from benign monarchs, stand to lose property estimated at $200,000,000.

Officials admit, however, that this total may be reduced through mortgage and lease technicalities which they may not be able to overcome.

Proud names figure in the ownership of lands subject to confiscation. The Dukes of Infantado, Fernan Nunez, Medinaceli and Romanones are listed as holding lands ranging $3,000,000 to $7,000,000 in value for each. These holdings are being scrutinized as possible "heritages of the Spanish peasant."

• • • •

TWO major problems affect the probable action. Under the reform law the government must decide whether these aristocrats used their "palatine rights" or, in other words, acted as servants to the royal family.

Also it must decide whether the dons used other privileges of their exalted station, such as the prerogative of automatic access to the senate, with full voting powers.

Romanones, Alba, Medinaceli and other outstanding figures of the past regime are arraying legal lights to defend their interests.

Doughty Romanones stands out particularly as a stanch defender of property which he claims to have "amassed and administered as a true Spaniard throughout a lengthy career devoted to home and country."

Others of the affected aristocrats are reported so to have tied up their holdings in mortgage and leases that the agrarian reform institute may find itself facing international law in numerous instances.

Istanbul Museums Discover Big Thefts

Istanbul, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Theft of several million dollars' worth of imperial jewels and Moslem prayer rugs from Istanbul museums has been rediscovered.

On the eve of the World War 119 relics, including diamond aigrettes worn in sultanic turbans, and silk prayer rugs of enormous value were missing from the national museums.

Investigations were dropped during the war and are only now being taken up again—but it is found that the papers relating to the initial inquiry also have been stolen.

The police believe they are on the track of one of the prayer-rugs, which is supposed to have been sold in the United States for $65,000.

The old thefts were "rediscovered" because of the recent loss of another rug worth $250,000, supposedly sent from Konia to the Istanbul Religious Museum, but which never arrived.

Glorifying Privation Is Held Nonsensical

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Out of the trials that have come with the years of depression some useful lessons of frugality have been learned. Doubtless many have found that they can be happy with a reduced income, but attempts to glorify privation as something that builds character and chastens the soul have in some instances been nonsensical. The argument that a man may become a finer, sweeter person because he loses his job and his home is foreclosed does not appeal to the American spirit.

There is little reason in supposing that a man who used to earn $200 a week will reach a high plane of spirituality because he can now earn only $25.

The sensational examples of quick-rich spenders always attract attention and often lead to unjustified generalizations. American wages and living comforts are the best in the world, but there are still large numbers of the population in the cities and on the farms whose incomes and standards are pitifully low. The mass of the population did not squander extravagant incomes, even during the boom era. The National Bureau of Economic Research estimates that the average wage earner's income in 1927 was $1,205 and that of the average salaried employe $2,084, a figure which includes the high-paid executives. The Department of Agriculture has shown that on well over half the farms there are no modern improvements in the homes such as running water, bathrooms, furnaces or electric lights.

There is no justification in urging that it is "noble" to turn our backs upon the very forces which have provided most of the population with more health and comfort giving devices than are enjoyed elsewhere in the world. There can be no return to primitive ways in this country. To discard the machine because the system of distribution is still faulty is to mistake the culprit. The way of progress lies in providing advantages for all, not in urging more to dispense with them.

Dole Is Squandered On Silks and Races

Sydney, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Government investigators have discovered that many Australian women receiving the dole spend it on silk stockings, dancing pumps, perfumes and other luxuries.

Men sell their dole tickets at a big discount for cash which they bet at the race tracks or the tin rabbit courses.

The government now has made it an offense to give anything but food in trade for dole tickets.

Rome Spreads Out to Stop Crowding; Now Largest City

Rome, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Rome city fathers, having included within their metropolis everything within long range gun fire, proclaim the imperial city as covering 800 square miles and the widest, if not the most populous, in the world.

The city now extends legally to Ostia on the seacoast and over mountains, rivers and vacant barren lands in other directions. The newspapers say:

"The new Rome of Mussolini is free from that monstrous and Babelic crowding which characterizes other metropolises."

"Lilabet" Lives Unaware She Is Nation's Idol

Princess, 6, Who May Rule Britain, Still Is in Land of Make-Believe.

LONDON, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Though a half year has passed since her sixth birthday made her "really a big girl," Princess Elizabeth still lives in the land of make-believe.

The little girl, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York and third in line of succession to the British throne, is the nation's idol. Only her bachelor "Uncle David," Prince of Wales, and her own father stand between her and the crown, but her horizon is still limited by the walls of her nursery.

Just how true this is, is told by Anne King in bringing up to date the life story of "Lilabet," the first volume of which came out two years ago.

"Princess Elizabeth has a toy pony on wheels, called Tommy, stabled behind the black and gold lacquer screen in the drawing room of her parents' home," the authoress now relates.

"When she is grooming or harnessing Tommy, no visitor may approach him till his mistress has whispered an introduction into his ears. For Tommy dislikes strangers and will bite. Furthermore, coming up behind Tommy within range of his flying heels would be simply suicidal."

Princess Elizabeth "loves going to Windsor," where she has her real pony, "Peggy," and where watching the soldiers commands a goodly share of her time.

When she plays cards with her grandmother, Queen Mary, the authoress relates that, seized with excitement, the little girl will cry out: "Oh, Grannie, you mustn't win, you mustn't win!"

PRINCESS ELIZABETH.

Among Her Pets Is Canary, Given to Her "When He Was an Egg."

Her grandmother's opinion of the princess was given in a few words:

"I don't think any child could be more sensibly brought up. She leads such a simple life, and she always is punished when she's naughty."

Most of the little girl's introduction to the world of affairs is coming through books, since she can read now, though she still loves best for grown-ups to read stories and nursery rhymes to her.

She has a few short lessons in the morning—music, French and riding—and the rest of her time is passed quietly in the nursery with her baby sister, Princess Margaret, or with her parents.

"She knows nothing of that other side of her life, that aspect of herself as a nation's idol," the authoress writes. "She remains just a little girl, like any other girl playing with her baby sister, and passionately fond of her parents."

Among the princess' pets, besides the pony, is a small canary called "Sandy" after her small cousin.

"Did Sandy give him to you?" asked the duchess once.

"Yes," was the reply, "when he was an egg."

When, two years ago, the princess heard that she had a baby sister, Princess Margaret Rose, she was highly delighted and adopted the role of protectress.

"I'm going to call her "Bud," she announced soon after the baby's birth.

"Oh, but why 'Bud'?" protested the duchess. "I don't think I like that."

"Well, she's not a real rose yet, is she?" said the princess. "She's only a bud."

Irish Boycotters Aiding U.S. Trade by Hitting British

Dublin, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A British boycott campaign is being waged in virtually every city of the Free State, with committees urging the people not to buy goods manufactured in Great Britain.

Traveling salesmen employed by English firms report that in many lines it is practically impossible to get an order.

The result, they say, will be a bigger demand for continental and American goods, the buying of which is encouraged by those who are conducting the boycott.

Alessandri Warned by Col. Grove

New Chilean President May Face New Revolt Led by Returned Exile.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The main opposition force in the new political scene created by the election of the veteran Senator Arturo Alessandri as the first constitutional president of Chile since the overthrow of Juan Esteban Montero last June is being crystallized behind leadership of Col. Marmaduke Grove, recently returned exile.

Col. Grove, former air commodore and champion of the extreme Socialist policies which dominated Chile during the military-sponsored regime of Carlos Davila, which ended in September after three months ascendancy, has thrown down the gauntlet before the president.

He has notified Alessandri that policies of the new government must be acceptable to him or, despite their long friendship, Grove will lead a fight against him in congress and among the masses.

Although Alessandri, backed by Center parties, was given a clear majority over five other presidential candidates including Grove, the latter was in exile during the entire period of the campaign and was unable to make a speech in his own behalf.

• • • •

GROVE, an associate of Davila in the Socialist Junta, took the office of president for one brief week last June when Davila was temporarily ousted. Regaining power, Davila sent Grove in exile to Easter Island. Pardoned when Davila was overthrown, Grove was unable to reach Chile until the day of the election, October 31.

Following his recent manifesto in which he said he would not cooperate with any government not fully Socialist, Grove has been making plans for the coming months which will see Alessandri seated in La Moneda Palace, the new Congress beginning work as a constitutional assembly, and national efforts focused on a program for reduction of unemployment before the next winter.

Grove still maintains that the June 4 revolution was necessary for the country and warns the political parties that he will not hesitate to lead a new movement of a socialistic nature if the "interests of the common people are not dealt with properly by the new government."

• • • •

"ALL my efforts will be directed toward eventual triumph of Socialist ideals, for it is my firm conviction that only a socialistic government can solve the problems of Chile today," he said.

Concerning affairs of the United States and other foreign countries in Chile, Grove has directed his colleagues, who will be in Congress, to snipe away at any proposed settlement of the nitrate and other problems which are contrary to his own ideas. They are to wage war against the "foreign monopolists and imperialists" at all times.

Grove has opened the door, in the opinion of some politicians, for a possible pledge of cooperation with Alessandri, in case the latter's program contains features demanded by the extreme Leftists, excluding the Communists. Alessandri himself hopes to win the colonel over, or at least prevent an open break, for they have been friends many years.

77 Chilean Generals Still on Pay Roll

Santiago, Chile, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Government accountants, figuring who is active and who retired among the myriad military men flitting across recent political scenes, found 77 generals and 47 admirals on the pay roll.

Eleven generals and seven admirals were classed as active. The 66 generals and 40 admirals drawing pensions are supplemented by a lengthy list of retired colonels, commanders, majors and captains, some of them on full pay.

The army and navy together total 35,000 men, but there is a movement afoot in leftist quarters to have the personnel cut by a third, with reductions also in the pension lists.

New Pocket Cruiser Being Built by Berlin

She is to replace the 30-year-old Braunschweig, which was retired from service in 1917, but was reinstated by force of circumstances in 1921. The old cruiser, flagship of Germany's attenuated postwar navy, is to be scrapped after "C's" launching.

In speed and radius of action of cruiser "C" is much more formidable than her predecessor. The Braunschweig has three engines, developing 18,000 horsepower, and a speed of 18 to 19 knots. Cruiser "C" will be equipped with eight diesel motors, developing 54,000 horsepower, and will run 26 knots or more.

Braunschweig carried four 11-inch guns, fourteen 6.5-inch and ten 3.5-inch guns. Cruiser "C" will mount six 11-inch, eight 6-inch and four 3.5-inch weapons.

The new cruiser will have the limit displacement of 10,000 tons prescribed by the Versailles Treaty. Her length will be 606 feet, as compared with the Braunschweig's 420, but with her 69-foot width and 19-foot draught she will be narrower and shallower than her predecessor.

Flares, Century Old, Used in Celebration

Dogliani, Italy, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Matches 100 years old were used to light candles and cigarettes at a celebration here in honor of Domenico Ghigliano, their manufacturer.

Dogliani credits Ghigliano, a native son, with being the inventor of the sulphur match. Similar claims have been made by others, but Dogliani is so convinced that it has erected a monument to its townman.

The mayor produced the ancient box at a ceremony marking the hundredth anniversary of the invention.

The first match broke into flame at the second strike. Other honor guests were allowed to strike the remaining ones, all of which were good.

Ghigliano was a poor chemist when he produced his first match. Thereafter he manufactured them in boxes of twelve. The box used in the celebration was part of his first output.

Water Is Promised As Peace Reward

Hin, Oasis of Giofra, Tripoli, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Water as the reward of peace has been promised to the warlike tribes of this desert region.

"I have made you the greatest possible gift," said Marshal Pietro Badoglio, Italy's governor of Libya, in a speech here. "I have established peace in all Tripoli. Now I will have a great well dug to give you plenty of water."

GALLERY GLIMPSES

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT

A FICKLE electorate balloted 12 new Democrats into the Senate and 93 more into the House. Seating them is a different matter. Ask Senate Minority Secretary Edwin A. Halsey and House Doorkeeper Joseph J. Sinnott. For hereon hangs a knotty problem. It keeps Col. Halsey awake o'nights thinking about it and has added at least one furrow to Doorkeeper Sinnott's brow.

It is not a new problem. The anguish all started back in 1891 when 231 Democrats were elected to the House against 88 Republicans. The Democrats just wouldn't fit on their side of the chamber. An ingenious doorkeeper created a block of seats on the far Republican side. It was called "The Cherokee Strip."

Ever since, when there has been a landslide, a few new members in House and Senate have been stranded in opposition territory. But the plan has disadvantages. New members are not anxious to be quarantined in this manner. And the segregation doesn't exactly lend itself to party solidarity on the floor.

So Col. Halsey is perplexed. He may experiment a little with shifting of desks in the Senate chamber. It is just possible they can be moved close enough together to make room for 12 new ones on the Democratic side. If not—the Cherokee Strip.

In no less a quandary is House Doorkeeper Sinnott. Way back in the Sixty-third Congress the House did away with assigned desks and seats and since then representatives have been sitting on benches, pretty much where they chose. They always observe center aisle division. Doorkeeper Sinnott finds it impossible to pack more than 248 Democrats on one side of the chamber. There will be 314 next Congress. He can't plot a Cherokee Strip because there are no assigned seats. What to do? He confides his troubles in Democratic Leader Henry T. Rainey.

SO there is much talk these days about the Cherokee Strip, and many tales are told of how it got its name. One story has it named after the Oklahoma Indian tribe, astray from its reservation. We prefer to take the version of Jim Preston, Senate librarian, who was many years superintendent of the Senate press gallery.

About the time of the Democratic landslide of 1891, according to Jim, there was a strip of land across northern Oklahoma, 220 miles long by 86 wide, owned by the Cherokee Indian Nation. This Government was negotiating for its purchase and legislation to bring it about was before Congress.

The land was referred to as "The Cherokee Strip," so when the Democrats overflowed their bounds in the House and many were partitioned off on the far Republican side, some House wag thought the name appropriate. It stuck.

Two years later, according to Jim, the Oklahoma strip was purchased from the Cherokee nation and opened for settlement. The price paid was $8,000,000.

Senator Borah, of Idaho, is the only survivor of the famous Cherokee Strip of 1909, when ten Republicans were forced to sit in a block on the Democratic side of the Senate. In the Sixty-seventh Congress Republicans again numbered 59. Another strip was created. Senators Oddie, Nebraska; Shortridge, California, and Norbeck, South Dakota, survive it. In 1916 the late Tom Taggart, Indiana Democrat, sat alone in the midst of the enemy on the Republican side of the Senate.

CANADA has arrived at a nice arrangement with the United States in the nice matter of corn tariff and corn whisky distillation. House Democratic Leader Rainey, much harrassed these days about Volstead act modification, tells this one:

It seems Americans are the only people in the world who drink corn whisky. And it seems that corn grown here is the only corn in the world from which corn whisky can be made. It also seems that Canada has levied a tariff of 25 cents a bushel on American corn.

But it works out this way: Canada buys its corn from Australia. It doesn't want American corn except to distill and sell back to Americans. So the tariff is cut to 7 cents on all Government corn crossing the border into Canada for distilling purposes.

It turns out to be only a matter of bookkeeping, for in liquid form the corn is shipped right back to the United States again under Government seal so that discriminating prescription wielders may have Canadian distilled Kentucky Bourbon. If this doesn't make sense, ask Mr. Rainey to tell it his way.

Representative Adolph J. Sabath (Democrat), Illinois, has no sympathy with this arrangement. He campaigns on a low-tariff platform but favors high embargoes on foreign beverages. Last week he served notice on all who are placing large orders abroad, that there won't be any foreign liquor import if he has his say. He thinks America should brew its own.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY

By the 97th Senator

Wednesday.

THIS was a bad year for the famous tariff team of Hawley and Smoot. Hawley's constituents didn't wait for the election to retire him; they beat him in the primary. A political nobody vanquished him. Smoot went down to defeat in the election after receiving the Republican nomination virtually by unanimous consent.

Naturally, there is considerable jumping at conclusions concerning the cause of their downfall. Some commentators not well informed about the facts want to attribute it to their sponsoring the high duties of the Hawley-Smoot tariff. Information coming to me from Oregon and Utah does not bear out this conclusion. On the contrary, it appears to indicate that their constituents were not dissatisfied because the duties were too high, but were angry because they weren't high enough, especially on the products of Oregon and Utah. They felt about like Uncle Joe Grundy. Although Uncle Joe's name is sometimes attached to the Hawley-Smoot bill, he indignantly disowned it when it passed the Senate, because he considered that its rates were much too low to afford adequate protection.

My theory is that Messrs. Hawley and Smoot, like so many others of my colleagues who fell by the wayside, were victims of the depression and the widespread determination of the voters to vent their wrath upon the "ins."

Hawley has been a member of the House since 1907. He has been an industrious and able member. Smoot first came to the Senate nearly 30 years ago, and until November 8 he has been reelected regularly almost without opposition. Hawley is now 68 years old and Smoot is 70. Both are experts on the tariff and taxation. Both are ultraconservatives in their political and economic viewpoint. It seems rather a pity that under our political system both must now be retired to private life at the very time when their experience and knowledge might be of great usefulness to the country. Perhaps some way can still be found to utilize their talents.

It was a bad year on tariff makers, it likewise was rough on deans. Each house gets a new dean as a consequence of the election returns. Smoot, with five consecutive six-year terms to his credit, will be displaced by Borah, who came to the Senate just 25 years ago. Gilbert Haugen, of McNary-Haugen fame, who has been a member of the House since 1899, went down to defeat in the Iowa landslide. The new dean will be Representative Edward W. Pou, of North Carolina, who has been serving in the House since 1901.

The roll call of the elder statesmen in both houses is badly tattered. Death, defeat and voluntary retirement have eliminated an unusual number of the old-timers in the last two or three years. Jack Garner ranks next to Pou in seniority in the House, but it is presumed he will give up his seat to become Vice President on March 4, as a consequence of which Henry Rainey, of Illinois, the white-haired Democratic floor leader, will be second in line in length of service.

In the Senate, virtually all the Old Guardsmen have been eliminated. Senator Fletcher, of Florida, and Ellison Smith, of South Dakota, both Democrats, rank next to Borah. George Norris is the next Republican, following Borah in length of service, and George hasn't supported the Republican ticket in years. The senior regular Republican in the Senate after March 4, strange to relate, will be "Young Freddie" Hale, of Maine, who entered in 1917.

The "baby" member of the Senate, as I understand it, will be Gov. Russell, of Georgia. He is 34 years old. He will displace "Young Bob" La Follette, who has held the honor of being the youngest member since his election seven years ago, when he was just 30.

Thursday.

THE esteemed savant, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, is demanding the reorganization and "liberalization" of the Republican party. He fears for its future. In view of the crushing defeat it sustained on November 8, the good doctor warns that there is danger it will disappear from the American political scene after the fashion of the Whig party in the fifties.

Dr. Butler, in my opinion, is needlessly alarmed. The Republican party is a tough old institution. It has been defeated before, and it always comes back with renewed vigor. In fact, a good licking now and then seems to be just the tonic the party needs. It goes off in a corner, nurses its wounds, develops new blood and returns to the fray with refreshed strength.

I recall particularly the terrible drubbing it received in 1912. President Taft polled only a little more than 3,000,000 popular votes, carried just two States—Vermont and Utah—and won exactly eight electoral votes. The Bull Moose party, it was said, had permanently displaced it. The Republican party, many sage observers contended, would be relegated to a minor role and would eventually disappear from American politics.

Dr. Butler ought to remember that vividly, because he was made President Taft's vice presidential running mate that year, after the death of Vice President Sherman. But there was still plenty of life left in the grand old party. Four years later it virtually swallowed up the Bull Moose party, staged a sensational comeback under Charles Evans Hughes, and came within an eyelash of winning the Presidency again. Eight years later it recaptured complete control of the Federal Government by the largest popular plurality in the history of the country.

Four years ago, I remember, many political experts were predicting the disintegration of the Democratic party after Al Smith's defeat. The Republicans had rolled up a popular majority in excess of 6,000,000 and broken all records in the electoral college. And now observe the Democratic Party today.

Both parties, in fact, have an amazing vitality and they always manage to survive the dire forecasts of the prophets after election. The Republican party on November 8 polled more than 15,000,000 votes. When the final returns are counted, they probably will show that Mr. Hoover's vote in defeat was larger than Calvin Coolidge's landslide plurality in 1924.

Keeping in mind these considerations, I expect to see the Republican party very much alive and kicking for many more years. I am willing to hazard at least half of my next year's mileage allowance that it will make a serious dent in the Democratic congressional majority two years hence, and four years from now, well, who knows, who knows?

THE DIPLOMATIC POUCH

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

Authors.

THE greatness of a literary figure like Paul Claudel is often so eminent that he tends to overshadow other literary members of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington. Several other diplomats have outstanding works of profound research and long study which, unfortunately, do not get so well known because of the recondite nature of the book or because of the restricted appeal of their volumes.

Particularly is this literary activity true in the members of the Latin-American countries. The Chilean Ambassador, Don Miguel Cruchaga, for example, is now completing his monumental study of international law in three volumes, which will shortly be issued by the Carnegie Endowment. This is the fourth study of the problems in international relations which the learned Chilean jurisconsult has written. The present work will in all probability be the most modern interpretation of the new factors in world relations which have arisen out of the post-war conditions. The foreword will be written by Dr. James Brown Scott, of the Carnegie Endowment, and each volume is expected to be more than 700 pages.

Ambassador Cruchaga has been able to finish this international legal study despite the requirements of his position as umpire in the various claims between Mexico and Spain, Italy and Germany. His legal decisions in this long period will soon be issued in book form. After he had completed his decisions in Mexico, the Mexican government made the Chilean Ambassador the first civilian in a new order, the Order of Aguila Azteca.

Guatemala.

The Minister of Guatemala, Dr. Adrian Recinos, is a modest literary worker. In his early days he was the author of a short history of philosophy which is now adopted by the high schools of his country as a textbook. However, the attractions of the political arena were more appealing than the tranquillity of the literary study, and since his appointment here as minister, Dr. Recinos has had little opportunity for creative literary work.

Venezuela.

THE diplomatic representative of Gen. Gomez in the United States was one of the author of several legal volumes, which have had very little popularity outside of a limited circle on account of their ponderous, heavy style. Dr. Arcaya himself was once a judge of the supreme court of Venezuela and his legalistic background has served to complicate his literary style and make it difficult.

However, the counselor of the Venezuelan Legation, Dr. Luis Shurion, and the secretary, Dr. Pedro Rivero, had written poems of a deep mystical nature, evidently inspired by the "Anonce Faite a Marie" of French Ambassador Claudel.

Haiti.

The Haitian Minister, Dantes Bellegarde, is the anomaly of the Pan-American Union. While all his other colleagues speak in Spanish, including even Portuguese-speaking Brazilian Ambassador Lima e Silva, Haitian Minister Bellegarde speaks only French. This accounts for some very amusing incidents sometimes, as on the recent occasion, every one smiled benignly after he had finished a fiery address, which was in reality a fiery criticism of the American policy in Haiti, as they thought he had been merely expressing his warm approval of Secretary Stimson.

Minister Bellegarde writes a very pure and limpid French. He has confined himself chiefly to political subjects and is the corresponding member of several French literary societies.

Honduras.

"Let my lyre be silent." This was the apostrophe addressed to his poetic muse by Honduran Minister Celeo Davila after he had decided to leave his post as vice consul in New Orleans and return to Tegucigalpa and enter political life. Up to that time the minister had been the author of several poems which had more than the usual merit of such youthful effusions. His friends have urged him to continue, now that the Conservative candidate for president, Senor Carias, has been elected.

Ecuador.

IN Gonzalo Zaldumbide the Ecuadorian government have not only an efficient minister but a critic of the Spanish language whose genius is acknowledged even by authorities of Spanish learned societies.

Minister Zaldumbide has a flawless, polished style in Spanish which has been compared by some critics to the English of Max Beerbohm. The same crispness, the same conciseness, that effort for the exact meaning with the least words, characterizes his studies.

In particular he has written a criticism of the works of Montalvo, which bids fair to outlast the subjects criticized. Montalvo was a prominent figure in the literary life of Ecuador but it is often said that many people know Montalvo better through Zaldumbide than they would know him through reading his own books.

He often attributes his lack of production to a painstaking effort for perfection, which has resulted in seriously affecting his literary output. Incidentally, Minister Zaldumbide is one of the best dressed men in the Diplomatic Corps.

Paraguay.

Dr. Pablo M. Ynsfran, Charge d'Affaires of Paraguay, made a literary study of his country under the title of "Contemporaneous Paraguay," which was very well received in his own country.

Bolivia.

Dr. Enrique Pinot, the present minister, once wrote a book about the Chaco which almost created a diplomatic incident. The book contained some very frank criticisms of the United States and particularly of Maj. Gen. Frank McCoy and Assistant Secretary of State Francis White, for their part in the conciliation commission of 1929.

Names of Women Canvassed Fit for High Political Positions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Agitation for the appointment of a woman member of the President's Cabinet is not unusual at this stage of governmental transition. For some time the peculiar fitness of Miss Frances Perkins for the position of Secretary of Labor has been extolled. She is Industrial Commissioner of the State of New York and in both experience and ability is said to be well fitted for the post. Miss Perkins' qualifications were praised by Mrs. William Dick Sporborg, president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, at its annual meeting in New York.

Mrs. Sporborg does not want to see any "sentimental" appointment made. When a woman is named to the Cabinet it must be the recognition of a woman whose record in public service will stand without criticism for ability and successful achievement, she says. She wants it understood that she approves of election or appointment to political office only for women who are at least as well qualified as men for those offices. Mrs. Sporborg's first choice for a cabinet post is Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, believing that she would represent all women in such a position as she did in her work for international peace and in the suffrage movement.

The names of others mentioned before the federation meeting as capable of filling an official position with distinction included Judge Florence Allen, of Ohio, a lawyer who would "give genuine service as Assistant Attorney General." Both former Representatives Ruth Bryan Owen and Ruth Hanna Simms were suggested as women experienced in public life who could fill a Federal position with credit. Another name put forward was that of Mrs. Nellie Taylor Ross, former Governor of Wyoming, and vice chairman of the Democratic national committee.

Mrs. Sporborg apparently expressed the sentments of the 400 New York clubwomen delegates when she said: "What women ask for is to be judged by their achievements and not to have one of their number chosen for the Cabinet just because 'it would be a good thing to appoint a woman.'"

Internationalism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For fourteen years our little world has been lost in a fog so dense that none of its rulers have seemed to know for what port they were steering. Memory recalls that our last Democratic President did his best.

Telegraphs and airplanes loudly preach not old isolation and independence, but internationalism and interdependence. We may hope that our recent disavowal of these ancient impolicies may bring this long suffering world a new deal, commerce unhampered, friendships renewed, yes, even disarmament, the recognition of Russia, and the taking our rightful part in President Wilson's institutions, the world court and the League of Nations, neither being "entangling alliances," but both designed to disentangle international troubles and prevent idiotic war.

How Internationalism can benefit the whole world our very efficient universal postal conventions and conveniences witness.

Yours for an open mind, a square Wilsonian deal and success to our new steersman.

MAN O' NATURE

By EDGAR A. GUEST

Along the way where I chanced to stray
An artist chap I met.
His easel stood, near a patch of wood,
With paint was his canvas wet,
But he said to me: "This you mustn't see.
It is far from finished yet."

"Oh," said I, "let me cast an eye
On the picture just begun,
For it must be fair, as the scene out there
With the autumn coming on."
"Come back," said he, "in a month and see
This thing when my work is done."

Then I thought I heard a twittering bird
Perched high in a nearby tree
Say: "Men must choose their tints and hues
And most particular be,
For the finished task is the thing they ask
That God will wait to see.

"But nature wields in the open fields
Her brushes of rare delight,
And never says: 'Wait, till some later date
And I'll show you a rarer sight,'
But from start to last, where man's eyes are cast
Her landscapes seem just right."

ARGENTINA'S POLICY.

After having refused to co-operate with other American republics in employing a neutral commission to labor for adjustment of the Chaco dispute between Bolivia and Paraguay, the government of Argentina now refuses to agree to the plan conceived by the commission. This plan provides for sending a commission to the fighting ground, to make certain that the agreement of the two disputants to suspend hostilities is observed in good faith, pending resort to arbitration. If either party should be found to persist in hostilities, the commission would be empowered to declare it the aggressor, whereupon the American republics would be invited to suspend diplomatic and consular relations with the offender.

The Argentine government refuses to concur in this plan, intimating that it is an attempt at coercion and intervention. In its note to the neutral commission Argentina refers to a shadowy project broached by it some months ago, apparently intended to be a substitute for the course of action approved by all the other republics. In the meantime Argentine officials are cultivating the idea of giving the League of Nations jurisdiction over the Chaco dispute.

The neutral commission acts under the authority of the nations composing the Pan American Union. The commission is made up of representatives of Uruguay, Colombia, Mexico, Cuba and the United States. Argentina declined a place on the commission. This commission has worked with unceasing patience and fairness in endeavoring to prevent hostilities, and has been supported by all the republics except Argentina. While that government gives lip service to the commission, its failure to cooperate has been a factor in delaying the negotiations.

The neutral commission has reminded Argentina that acceptance by Bolivia and Paraguay of the plan to send a commission to the Chaco under the terms proposed gives full warrant for the application of the remedy in the event of further hostilities. The commission reiterates the intention of the American republics to make every effort in behalf of peace.

It is unfortunate that the government of Argentina finds it to its interest to disagree with other nations of this hemisphere in the prosecution of plans which they approve, looking to good relations and pacific settlement of disputes between them.

SENATOR WESLEY L. JONES.

The death of Senator Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, is attributable to overwork. With the single exception of Senator Smoot, of Utah, the Washington senator had no rival in incessant industry. He was chairman of the committee on appropriations, and in this capacity was expected to familiarize himself with all the expenditures of the Government. He not only did this, but was a leader in devising plans for retrenchment and economy. This task involved months of drudgery, claiming and receiving no public acclaim, but gaining the honor of serving the country faithfully and well. No member of the Senate was more highly respected by his colleagues than Wesley L. Jones. They are in a position to appreciate the patriotic devotion with which he labored.

The tax upon the physical endurance of senators in certain committees is too heavy for the strength of the ordinary man. How Senator Smoot has managed to survive is one of the modern wonders. The late Senator Warren, of Wyoming, bore the burden of the appropriations committee to an advanced age, but he was a giant in strength. Senator Jones had been weakened by a serious operation several years ago, but he persisted in his work, and then actively participated in the recent strenuous campaign. He dies at the age of 69, many years too soon.

OUR OLDEST FESTIVAL.

This is Thanksgiving week. The anniversary falls upon the earliest possible date this year, the 143rd since the Congress of 1789 requested President Washington to set aside a day "of public Thanksgiving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God." It was in many ways fitting that President Hoover's proclamation this year should repeat the Thanksgiving message to the young nation from the first President.

Conditions in America are vastly different from those confronting the struggling nation in those early years of independence, yet with all the evident growth in area, population and material wealth, new problems arise calling in large measure for the same spirit of devotion to the fatherland as in that formative period. Washington was concerned in his message with questions of war and peace and the complex questions which must concern a new government. The passing of one complete century and nearly the third of another does not greatly alter man's duties, either in public or private action.

Washington's proclamation enjoins a spirit of devotion, of hope and courage in the face of grave responsibilities. These admonitions are as timely today as they were in the closing years of the eighteenth century. Apprehension that the nation might lack the essentials of life have changed to problems in the distribution of super-abundance, but the solution is no less vital to the general welfare. America stands in no immediate danger from foreign aggression today, but the domestic social and economic structure calls for betterments and safeguards which require the cooperation of all good elements of society.

This is a week in which Americans everywhere are being asked to provide for the needy and ailing of the nation, that there may be no actual suffering from lack of food and shelter during the coming winter. The season of Thanksgiving is one in which all citizens who still are blessed with something beyond the comforts of life cheerfully assist the less fortunate to the full extent of their ability.

TIGHTEN UP HOUSE RULES.

A movement is reported to be underway for revision of the rules of the House of Representatives. When the Republican party was in control of the House, a great deal of complaint about "gag rules" was heard from the Democratic minority. Consequently, when Representative Garner stepped into the Speaker's chair the rules were liberalized. In view of the previous criticism from Democratic leaders, they could not have taken any other course with consistency.

Now it appears that the Democratic leaders are dissatisfied with their liberal rules. On several occasions in the last session the House broke completely away from control by the majority leaders and passed measures that became very embarrassing to the Democratic party. Since control of the entire Government will pass into Democratic hands on March 4, leaders of that party are considering precautions to avoid future revolts among undisciplined members of the House.

So-called liberal rules in the House put a premium on bloc action. A strong admixture of politics and liberal rules enables a minority to block or pass legislation. When a minority can force consideration of a bill at a crucial moment many weak-kneed congressmen dare not vote against it and the bill may be passed, even though it is contrary to the best judgment of the majority. That is substantially what happened in the case of the bonus bill in the last session. It was repudiated by the ways and means committee, and brought up on the floor by a petition to which 145 members had fixed their signatures. If a majority vote had been required to discharge the committee from consideration of this bill, it would not have been passed. But when forced to a record vote by a minority, many members lacked the courage to oppose it.

Leaders in the House may expect support from the people in amending the rules to make a recurrence of this and similar episodes impossible. Any legislative body with 435 members needs strict rules to keep it operating smoothly and to save it from demoralization by selfish blocs and minorities. In the Seventy-third Congress the Democratic party will have no formidable opposition from the Republicans, but the groups which were in operation this year will still be present. A tightening up of rules may be essential to keep them from running wild.

Only a minority party delights in defective rules that permit it to upset the program of the majority. It is the responsibility of the party in control to lay down such rules as will permit it to carry out its pledges to the people without grave dangers of frustration by blocs and minorities. Constructive leadership can be made effective only through reasonably stringent rules.

"BACK TO THE LAND."

Movements to relieve jobless men by sending them "back to the farm" have brought a decided back-kick from agricultural areas and from experts in the use of land. "It is our measured judgment," says a current report from the national land use committees, "that a wholesale, unguided back-to-the-land movement is the poorest possible solution for the unemployment problem." Farmers may well be resentful of any schemes to accentuate their troubles by sending unemployed men from the cities to increase competition on the farm.

The committee of experts on land use points out that agriculture has been in depression for ten years. The buying power of the farmer has been crippled by overproduction which has resulted in extremely low prices for crops of all kinds. Certainly this is no time to settle more people upon farms, thus increasing agricultural production. A concerted movement back to the farm might "permanently affect all hope of agricultural stability and prosperity." Before agriculture is ready to absorb a vast army of unemployed workers from the cities it must find a market to dispose of crops that are now rotting in the ground for want of demand.

Personal difficulties always arise when attempts are made to transfer industrial workers to farms. As a rule the unemployed have no capital, no equipment, and very little training in the production of crops or farm management. Since no free land fit for cultivation is available, and the supply of farm hands far exceeds the demand already, opportunities for would-be farmers from the cities are extremely limited. The chances for reabsorbing the industrial unemployed into economic pursuits to which they are accustomed are far more promising than are the prospects for successful farming. Families that go back to the land can hope for little more than subsistence, and frequently they can not win that much.

The committee asks for enactment of the McNary resolution authorizing Federal agencies to cooperate with State and local agencies in advising individuals as to specific opportunities for settlement on land. The first effect of such a measure would be to discourage the back-to-the-land movement that is now under way.

BUYING GOOD WILL.

Suppose we rebuff them. Imagine our Government insisting brusquely upon the letter of its bond. What would be the result? Obviously an immense loss to this country of good-will abroad.—New York Times.

Suppose the debtors should brusquely insist upon paying. What would be the result? Obviously, an immense increase of American good will toward them.

Japan accuses the United States of setting up the puppet state of Panama. If she will now run a world canal through Manchukuo the parallel will hold.

Trouble is brewing for the Supreme Court on the question of the intent of Congress in providing high-power beer that is not intoxicating.

POST HASTE

Our Son of York will not have much opportunity to summerize this winter, but there will still be some discontent next March that will need attention.

There is bound to be some bright lad in Congress who will think up a new trick, like attaching a beer rider to a tax bill.

Democracy is expensive. The Press Club's informal dinner for Gov. Roosevelt is a five-buck setback for the boys, but they will get to see Jim Farley, too.

A sales tax which would increase the cost of purchases for 20,000,000 of the population 5 cents a day, for 20,000,000 10 cents a day, and for 10,000,000 20 cents a day, would yield $1,500,000,000 in 300 days. Who couldn't stand it?

The commendable suggestion is now made that the Home Loan Bank act be modified by Congress so that some loans can be made on homes.

The first organization vote in the Senate should make interesting disclosures as to how many Progressive Republicans were transformed by the election into Retrogressive Democrats.

By Thanksgiving the Cabinet, present and future executives and congressmen will have conferred on international debts. What will Europe give for the answer now?

The conscience content of many congressional minds apparently could be stretched considerably if they did not know that those of the Supreme Court can not.

From a purely philological viewpoint, if it hadn't been for American dough and American doughboys what language would the allied nations be speaking?

In this modern reversal of things it should be noted that Amy Johnson is now sorry she beat her husband so badly.

It might also be called a sails tax to raise the wind for the Ship of State when the income steam pressure is low.

Gov. Roosevelt has issued a Thanksgiving proclamation and no one will question its sincerity.

What would the Humane Society do to anybody who made nice college boys work in the mud as hard as they play football?

It sounds lots more statesmanlike for a lame-duck to say he accepts the election mandate of the people than to admit he is going to flop on prohibition.

Legislators need another guess if they think the Budweiser boys will have no kick coming if the beer is the same way.

PAUL HUDSON.

AS SEEN BY EUROPE

Comment From London, Paris and Rome on American Election and Probable Foreign Policy.

London Times Editorial.

Mr. Roosevelt is perhaps fortunate that, in accordance with the constitutional procedure of the United States, it will be nearly four months before he is inaugurated as President and assumes responsibility for the administration. It will be a tremendous responsibility. If he is not to disappoint the hopes of the Nation which has so unsparingly condemned his predecessor for failing to stem the tide of depression, he must solve the riddle of its cause, or rather its causes, and unflinchingly apply the appropriate remedies no matter what interests or sections he may offend. He will have need of all his courage, for he will have to grapple with problems—political, economic and financial—over which all those whose business it is to understand them are hopelessly at variance.

In other countries which are shut out geographically from any hope of self-sufficiency the fundamental problem is obscured. Many plausible explanations may be found for the breakdown of trade in Europe, parceled out as it is into small departments, none of which can hope to be self-supporting, but which none the less have shut themselves off from one another by high tariff walls and which are set at cross purposes by national dislikes and suspicions. But these explanations do not apply to the United States. * * * What is the explanation that in such a country the farmers and the manufacturers can not exchange their products, that food is unsalable while millions of factory workers are idle and starving, and that the farmer has to go without the goods which they should be employed in making?

It is for Mr. Roosevelt to discover the causes of this disastrous collapse of the machinery of exchange and distribution and to strive to build it up again. If he fails he will be condemned as Mr. Hoover has just been condemned.

The interest taken on this side of the Atlantic in the welfare of the United States is not mere altruism. * * * The return of prosperity, even of comparative prosperity, in the United States will contribute to the recovery of the rest of the world, just as the restoration of more stable conditions elsewhere will contribute to the recovery of America.

All the world, therefore, will follow with anxious and most sympathetic interest Mr. Roosevelt's efforts to cope with the gigantic task awaiting him. It is not to be expected that the change in the Presidency will be followed by any notable change in the American foreign policy. Mr. Hoover and his Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, have worked ungrudgingly for disarmament and for international cooperation. They have had always to bear in mind both the specific interests of their own country, which they were bound to place first, and the effect of any projected measure on American public opinion. There is every reason to believe that Mr. Roosevelt, and whoever may succeed Mr. Stimson as Secretary of State, will work with equal devotion for the same causes.

On one point only is there any visible sign of a difference. Mr. Hoover somehow never seemed to realize—at any rate he never admitted openly—that international debts can only be paid in goods and services, and that prohibitive tariffs in the United States, shutting out foreign goods and forcing foreign countries to endeavor to pay their debts in gold, were at the least a contributing cause in the dislocation of international exchanges and in all the evil results which have followed from it. Mr. Roosevelt and still more Mr. Al Smith, whose ideas are entitled to a certain influence upon the policy of the new administration, have shown a more obvious appreciation of the connection between debts and tariffs. They have even proclaimed the necessity of taking it into consideration in negotiations with the debtor nations. It is not unreasonable to hope, therefore, that the world economic conference when it assembles need not be stultified from the outset by the maintenance of the ban imposed on the discussion of war debts and tariff rates. Such a discussion might well lead to agreements calculated to stabilize international exchanges and to revive international trade.

THE FRENCH VIEWPOINT.
Paris Correspondence of the London Times.

The two points in the program of the new President which are of greatest importance to France are the allied questions of tariffs and war debts. Since war debts have hardly figured in the campaign, little guidance is afforded, but from the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is closely associated with a large body of experts whose views on this question are in the direction of a more liberal treatment of the problem than was possible during the Hoover regime, it is expected that the whole matter will be taken up in a different spirit.

Although Mr. Roosevelt declared himself opposed to cancellation the possibilities of a revision were not ruled out, and while the ultimate decision rests with Congress it is expected that a Democratic Congress would follow a definite lead from the President. It is too early to devote any consideration to the aspirations put forward in the French press that war debts might be treated as reparations were treated at Lausanne—on the basis of a final payment for settlement in full.

Most of all, France welcomes the departure from prohibition with the possibilities of a revival of the French wine export trade to America.

ITALIAN HOPES.
Rome Correspondence of the London Times.

It is not expected here that the United States foreign policy will be substantially changed by the election of Mr. Roosevelt. At the same time it is hoped that Mr. Roosevelt's attitude toward both prohibition and the tariff question may result in benefits not only to Italy, but to the world in general. Expectations are also entertained that Mr. Roosevelt will show himself more tractable in regard to the repayment of war debts than he dared to be during his electoral campaign. His attitude toward tariffs and the necessity of sweeping away the obstacles to a more normal flow of international commerce will, it is thought, be reinforced by the logic of facts, and consequently strong hopes are felt that Signor Mussolini's recent appeal to the United States will not remain unanswered.

THANKSGIVING.

Lord, we would thank Thee for the little things,
The crescent moon, the tenderness of night,
Red hearthfires, and the down from ridder wings,
Flowers, and children, and the morning light.

We thank Thee for the earth, the grass, the rain,
Temples, and domes, with clouds that drift above.
Lord, we would thank Thee for the gift of pain,
Because with this we plumb the depth of love.

MRS. ALFRED K. LIGHT—One Cabinet position is not enough for women. They should have half the Cabinet positions.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

The morbid muse who brooded in thy brain
Made thee to sing thy dreaming's futile sadness
In an unearthly, melancholy strain;
And from a haunted harp in gentle madness
Thy mournful themes with grief-tipped fingers tear
The mystic melodies of fine despair.

Grant that the gods thy vagrant spirit find
And bear with tend'rest care thy tear-spent soul
On kindly wings, as soft as summer's winds,
To misty meads—thy vague and ghostly goal—
Thy Ultimate Dim Thule's silent shore
To dwell, and clasp Lenore — for evermore.

NEW WORLD ERA.

By BENITO MUSSOLINI, as reported by Fredericka Blanker in North American Review.

The world is already entering upon tomorrow, but for the most part its governments and its discussions are of yesterday. True, the problems remaining to us from yesterday must be solved before we can advance, but they must be solved with the viewpoint of tomorrow. We keep trying to apply the solutions of yesterday and they do not fit, for they are too puny and complex for the newer, simpler, greater world into which we are evolving.

The present crisis is not a period of alternation within an epoch. It is the beginning of transition to another era. The world is making ready for a new order—it has outgrown the old. Part of the past is dying, much is dead, and the future is being born. The peoples of the world are beginning to awaken to a sense of new values, something new within themselves that has been lying dormant until now. These new values and forces are mainly spiritual. It is the task of the leaders of the world to assist evolution. They must discover what the new forces are, they must be brave enough to discard what is already dead or dying, and to devise systems in which the new is actively substituted for the old. Many of the difficulties with which we are struggling are confusions of the issue and are not the real problem.

Man's wants continue to be the same as they have always been, but he is beginning to realize that he will have to find another way to obtain them. The masses already know the answer within themselves. They realize that it is not by fighting that they can get what they want, but by working—by team-working, in which the United States is so able—that is, by cooperation.

CLOVER.

Wherever the first clover blooms,
With honey in its heart,
Golden bees will find the way
To ply their ancient art.

No winter's ever long enough
To breed forgetfulness,
To make the clover selfish
Or the bee love less.

Nations forget their pacts
And men go separate;
No tie like this exists
In any State.

Cycles of years go on
Into millennhums,
And still where clover blooms
The gold bee comes.

Spain Giving Dons' Land To Peasants

Grandees Fight Proposed Reward to Poor for Their Loyalty to Republic.

MADRID, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A land grant estimated way up in the hundred millions constitutes the prize which the present administration hopes to offer Spanish peasants as reward for their adhesion to the republic.

An inventory board appointed by the treasury department is listing lands of the aristocracy, making ready to distribute arable acres among the people under the recently approved agrarian reform law.

Former grandees and other aristocrats, who received their properties from benign monarchs, stand to lose property estimated at $200,000,000.

Officials admit, however, that this total may be reduced through mortgage and lease technicalities which they may not be able to overcome.

Proud names figure in the ownership of lands subject to confiscation. The Dukes of Infantado, Fernan Nunez, Medinaceili and Romanones are listed as holding lands ranging $3,000,000 to $7,000,000 in value for each. These holdings are being scrutinized as possible "heritages of the Spanish peasant."

* * * *

TWO major problems affect the probable action. Under the reform law the government must decide whether these aristocrats used their "palatine rights" or, in other words, acted as servants to the royal family.

Also it must decide whether the dons used other privileges of their exalted station, such as the prerogative of automatic access to the senate, with full voting powers.

Romanones, Alba, Medinaceili and other outstanding figures of the past regime are arraying legal lights to defend their interests.

Doughty Romanones stands out particularly as a stanch defender of property which he claims to have "amassed and administered as a true Spaniard throughout a lengthy career devoted to home and country."

Others of the affected aristocrats are reported so to have tied up their holdings in mortgage and leases that the agrarian reform institute may find itself facing international law in numerous instances.

Istanbul Museums Discover Big Thefts

Istanbul, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Theft of several million dollars' worth of imperial jewels and Moslem prayer rugs from Istanbul museums has been rediscovered.

On the eve of the World War 119 relics, including diamond aigrettes worn in sultanic turbans, and silk prayer rugs of enormous value were missing from the national museums.

Investigations were dropped during the war and are only now being taken up again—but it is found that the papers relating to the initial inquiry also have been stolen.

The police believe they are on the track of one of the prayer-rugs, which is supposed to have been sold in the United States for $65,000.

The old thefts were "rediscovered" because of the recent loss of another rug worth $250,000, supposedly sent from Konia to the Istanbul Religious Museum, but which never arrived.

Glorifying Privation Is Held Nonsensical

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Out of the trials that have come with the years of depression some useful lessons of frugality have been learned. Doubtless many have found that they can be happy with a reduced income, but attempts to glorify privation as something that builds character and chastens the soul have in some instances been nonsensical. The argument that a man may become a finer, sweeter person because he loses his job and his home is foreclosed does not appeal to the American spirit.

There is little reason in supposing that a man who used to earn $200 a week will reach a high plane of spirituality because he can now earn only $25.

The sensational examples of quick-rich spenders always attract attention and often lead to unjustified generalizations. American wages and living comforts are the best in the world, but there are still large numbers of the population in the cities and on the farms whose incomes and standards are pitifully low. The mass of the population did not squander extravagant incomes, even during the boom era. The National Bureau of Economic Research estimates that the average wage earner's income in 1927 was $1,205 and that of the average salaried employe $2,084, a figure which includes the high-paid executives. The Department of Agriculture has shown that on well over half the farms there are no modern improvements in the homes such as running water, bathrooms, furnaces or electric lights.

There is no justification in urging that it is "noble" to turn our backs upon the very forces which have provided most of the population with more health and comfort giving devices than are enjoyed elsewhere in the world. There can be no return to primitive ways in this country. To discard the machine because the system of distribution is still faulty is to mistake the culprit. The way of progress lies in providing advantages for all, not in urging more to dispense with them.

Dole Is Squandered On Silks and Races

Sydney, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Government investigators have discovered that many Australian women receiving the dole spend it on silk stockings, dancing pumps, perfumes and other luxuries.

The government now has made it an offense to give anything but food in trade for dole tickets.

Rome Spreads Out to Stop Crowding; Now Largest City

Rome, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Rome city fathers, having included within their metropolis everything within long range gun fire, proclaim the imperial city as covering 800 square miles and the widest, if not the most populous, in the world.

The city now extends legally to Ostia on the seacoast and over mountains, rivers and vacant barren lands in other directions. The newspapers say:

"The new Rome of Mussolini is free from that monstrous and Babelic crowding which characterizes other metropolises."

"Lilabet" Lives Unaware She Is Nation's Idol

Princess, 6, Who May Rule Britain, Still Is in Land of Make-Believe.

LONDON, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Though a half year has passed since her sixth birthday made her "really a big girl," Princess Elizabeth still lives in the land of make-believe.

The little girl, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York and third in line of succession to the British throne, is the nation's idol. Only her bachelor "Uncle David," Prince of Wales, and her own father stand between her and the crown, but her horizon is still limited by the walls of her nursery.

Just how true this is, is told by Anne King in bringing up to date the life story of "Lilabet," the first volume of which came out two years ago.

"Princess Elizabeth has a toy pony on wheels, called Tommy, stabled behind the black and gold lacquer screen in the drawing room of her parents' home," the authoress now relates.

"When she is grooming or harnessing Tommy, no visitor may approach him till his mistress has whispered an introduction into his ears. For Tommy dislikes strangers and will bite. Furthermore, coming up behind Tommy within range of his flying heels would be simply suicidal."

Princess Elizabeth "loves going to Windsor," where she has her real pony, "Peggy," and where watching the soldiers commands a goodly share of her time.

When she plays cards with her grandmother, Queen Mary, the authoress relates that, seized with excitement, the little girl will cry out: "Oh, Grannie, you mustn't win, you mustn't win!"

PRINCESS ELIZABETH.

Among Her Pets Is Canary, Given to Her "When He Was an Egg."

Her grandmother's opinion of the princess was given in a few words:

"I don't think any child could be more sensibly brought up. She leads such a simple life, and she always is punished when she's naughty."

Most of the little girl's introduction to the world of affairs is coming through books, since she can read now, though she still loves best for grown-ups to read stories and nursery rhymes to her.

She has a few short lessons in the morning—music, French and riding—and the rest of her time is passed quietly in the nursery with her baby sister, Princess Margaret, or with her parents.

"She knows nothing of that other side of her life, that aspect of herself as a nation's idol," the authoress writes. "She remains just a little girl, like any other girl playing with her baby sister, and passionately fond of her parents."

Among the princess' pets, besides the pony, is a small canary called "Sandy" after her small cousin.

"Did Sandy give him to you?" asked the duchess once.

"Yes," was the reply, "when he was an egg."

When, two years ago, the princess heard that she had a baby sister, Princess Margaret Rose, she was highly delighted and adopted the role of protectress.

"I'm going to call her 'Bud,'" she announced soon after the baby's birth.

"Oh, but why 'Bud'?" protested the duchess. "I don't think I like that."

"Well, she's not a real rose yet, is she?" said the princess. "She's only a bud."

Irish Boycotters Aiding U.S. Trade by Hitting British

Dublin, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A British boycott campaign is being waged in virtually every city of the Free State, with committees urging the people not to buy goods manufactured in Great Britain.

Traveling salesmen employed by English firms report that in many lines it is practically impossible to get an order.

The result, they say, will be a bigger demand for continental and American goods, the buying of which is encouraged by those who are conducting the boycott.

Alessandri Warned by Col. Grove

New Chilean President May Face New Revolt Led by Returned Exile.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The main opposition force in the new political scene created by the election of the veteran Senator Arturo Alessandri as the first constitutional president of Chile since the overthrow of Juan Esteban Montero last June is being crystallized behind leadership of Col. Marmaduke Grove, recently returned exile.

Col. Grove, former air commodore and champion of the extreme Socialist policies which dominated Chile during the military-sponsored regime of Carlos Davila, which ended in September after three months ascendancy, has thrown down the gauntlet before the president.

He has notified Alessandri that policies of the new government must be acceptable to him or, despite their long friendship, Grove will lead a fight against him in congress and among the masses.

Although Alessandri, backed by Center parties, was given a clear majority over five other presidential candidates including Grove, the latter was in exile during the entire period of the campaign and was unable to make a speech in his own behalf.

* * * *

GROVE, an associate of Davila in the Socialist Junta, took the office of president for one brief week last June when Davila was temporarily ousted. Regaining power, Davila sent Grove in exile to Easter Island. Pardoned when Davila was overthrown, Grove was unable to reach Chile until the day of the election, October 31.

Following his recent manifesto in which he said he would not cooperate with any government not fully Socialist, Grove has been making plans for the coming months, which will see Alessandri seated in La Moneda Palace, the new Congress beginning work as a constitutional assembly, and national efforts focused on a program for reduction of unemployment before the next winter.

Grove still maintains that the June 4 revolution was necessary for the country and warns the political parties that he will not hesitate to lead a new movement of a socialistic nature if the "interests of the common people are not dealt with properly by the new government."

* * * *

"ALL my efforts will be directed toward eventual triumph of Socialist ideals, for it is my firm conviction that only a socialistic government can solve the problems of Chile today," he said.

Concerning affairs of the United States and other foreign countries in Chile, Grove has directed his colleagues, who will be in Congress, to snipe away at any proposed settlement of the nitrate and other problems which are contrary to his own ideas. They are to wage war against the "foreign monopolists and imperialists" at all times.

Grove has opened the door, in the opinion of some politicians, for a possible pledge of cooperation with Alessandri, in case the latter's program contains features demanded by the extreme Leftists, excluding the Communists. Alessandri himself hopes to win the colonel over, or at least prevent an open break, for they have been friends many years.

77 Chilean Generals Still on Pay Roll

Santiago, Chile, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Government accountants, figuring who is active and who retired among the myriad military men flitting across recent political scenes, found 77 generals and 47 admirals on the pay roll.

Eleven generals and seven admirals were classed as active. The 66 generals and 40 admirals drawing pensions are supplemented by a lengthy list of retired colonels, commanders, majors and captains, some of them on full pay.

The army and navy together total 35,000 men, but there is a movement afoot in leftist quarters to have the personnel cut by a third, with reductions also in the pension lists.

New Pocket Cruiser Being Built by Berlin

She is to replace the 30-year-old Braunschweig, which was retired from service in 1917, but was reinstated by force of circumstances in 1921. The old cruiser, flagship of Germany's attenuated postwar navy, is to be scrapped after "C's" launching.

In speed and radius of action of cruiser "C" is much more formidable than her predecessor. The Braunschweig has three engines, developing 18,000 horsepower, and a speed of 18 to 19 knots. Cruiser "C" will be equipped with eight diesel motors, developing 54,000 horsepower, and will run 26 knots or more.

Braunschweig carried four 11-inch guns, fourteen 6.5-inch and ten 3.5-inch guns. Cruiser "C" will mount six 11-inch, eight 6-inch and four 3.5-inch weapons.

The new cruiser will have the limit displacement of 10,000 tons prescribed by the Versailles Treaty. Her length will be 605 feet, as compared with the Braunschweig's 420, but with her 60-foot width and 19-foot draught she will be narrower and shallower than her predecessor.

Water Is Promised As Peace Reward

Hin, Oasis of Giofra, Tripoli, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Water as the reward of peace has been promised to the warlike tribes of this desert region.

"I have made you the greatest possible gift," said Marshal Pietro Badoglio, Italy's governor of Libya, in a speech here. "I have established peace in all Tripoli. Now I will have a great well dug to give you plenty of water."

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT

A FICKLE electorate balloted 12 new Democrats into the Senate and 93 more into the House. Seating them is a different matter. Ask Senate Minority Secretary Edwin A. Halsey and House Doorkeeper Joseph J. Sinnott. For hereon hangs a knotty problem. It keeps Col. Halsey awake o'nights thinking about it and has added at least one furrow to Doorkeeper Sinnott's brow.

It is not a new problem. The anguish all started back in 1891 when 231 Democrats were elected to the House against 88 Republicans. The Democrats just wouldn't fit on their side of the chamber. An ingenious doorkeeper created a block of seats on the far Republican side. It was called "The Cherokee Strip."

Ever since, when there has been a landslide, a few new members in House and Senate have been stranded in opposition territory. But the plan has disadvantages. New members are not anxious to be quarantined in this manner. And the segregation doesn't exactly lend itself to party solidarity on the floor.

So Col. Halsey is perplexed. He may experiment a little with shifting of desks in the Senate chamber. It is just possible they can be moved close enough together to make room for 12 new ones on the Democratic side. If not—the Cherokee Strip.

In no less a quandary is House Doorkeeper Sinnott. Way back in the Sixty-third Congress the House did away with assigned desks and seats and since then representatives have been sitting on benches, pretty much where they chose. They always observe center aisle division. Doorkeeper Sinnott finds it impossible to pack more than 248 Democrats on one side of the chamber. There will be 314 next Congress. He can't plot a Cherokee Strip because there are no assigned seats. What to do? He confides his troubles in Democratic Leader Henry T. Rainey.

SO there is much talk these days about the Cherokee Strip, and many tales are told of how it got its name. One story has it named after the Oklahoma Indian tribe, astray from its reservation. We prefer to take the version of Jim Preston, Senate librarian, who was many years superintendent of the Senate press gallery.

About the time of the Democratic landslide of 1891, according to Jim, there was a strip of land across northern Oklahoma, 220 miles long by 86 wide, owned by the Cherokee Indian Nation. This Government was negotiating for its purchase and legislation to bring it about was before Congress.

The land was referred to as "The Cherokee Strip," so when the Democrats overflowed their bounds in the House and many were partitioned off on the far Republican side, some House wag thought the name appropriate. It stuck.

Two years later, according to Jim, the Oklahoma strip was purchased from the Cherokee nation and opened for settlement. The price paid was $8,000,000.

Senator Borah, of Idaho, is the only survivor of the famous Cherokee Strip of 1909, when ten Republicans were forced to sit in a block on the Democratic side of the Senate. In the Sixty-seventh Congress Republicans again numbered 59. Another strip was created. Senators Oddie, Nebraska; Shortridge, California, and Norbeck, South Dakota, survive it. In 1916 the late Tom Taggart, Indiana Democrat, sat alone in the midst of the enemy on the Republican side of the Senate.

CANADA has arrived at a nice arrangement with the United States in the nice matter of corn tariff and corn whisky distillation. House Democratic Leader Rainey, much harrassed these days about Volstead act modification, tells this one:

It seems Americans are the only people in the world who drink corn whisky. And it seems that corn grown here is the only corn in the world from which corn whisky can be made. It also seems that Canada has levied a tariff of 25 cents a bushel on American corn.

But it works out this way: Canada buys its corn from Australia. It doesn't want American corn except to distill and sell back to Americans. So the tariff is cut to 7 cents on all Government corn crossing the border into Canada for distilling purposes.

It turns out to be only a matter of bookkeeping, for in liquid form the corn is shipped right back to the United States again under Government seal so that discriminating prescription wielders may have Canadian distilled Kentucky Bourbon. If this doesn't make sense, ask Mr. Rainey to tell it his way.

Representative Adolph J. Sabath (Democrat), Illinois, has no sympathy with this arrangement. He campaigns on a low-tariff platform but favors high embargoes on foreign beverages. Last week he served notice on all who are placing large orders abroad, that there won't be any foreign liquor import if he has his say. He thinks America should brew its own.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY

By the 97th Senator

Wednesday.

THIS was a bad year for the famous tariff team of Hawley and Smoot. Hawley's constituents didn't wait for the election to retire him; they beat him in the primary. A political nobody vanquished him. Smoot went down to defeat in the election after receiving the Republican nomination virtually by unanimous consent.

Naturally, there is considerable jumping at conclusions concerning the cause of their downfall. Some commentators not well informed about the facts want to attribute it to their sponsoring the high duties of the Hawley-Smoot tariff. Information coming to me from Oregon and Utah does not bear out this conclusion. On the contrary, it appears to indicate that their constituents were not dissatisfied because the duties were too high, but were angry because they weren't high enough, especially on the products of Oregon and Utah. They felt about like Uncle Joe Grundy. Although Uncle Joe's name is sometimes attached to the Hawley-Smoot bill, he indignantly disowned it when it passed the Senate, because he considered that its rates were much too low to afford adequate protection.

My theory is that Messrs. Hawley and Smoot, like so many others of my colleagues who fell by the wayside, were victims of the depression and the widespread determination of the voters to vent their wrath upon the "ins."

Hawley has been a member of the House since 1907. He has been an industrious and able member. Smoot first came to the Senate nearly 30 years ago, and until November 8 he has been reelected regularly almost without opposition. Hawley is now 68 years old and Smoot is 70. Both are experts on the tariff and taxation. Both are ultraconservatives in their political and economic viewpoint. It seems rather a pity that under our political system both must now be retired to private life at the very time when their experience and knowledge might be of great usefulness to the country. Perhaps some way can still be found to utilize their talents.

It was a bad year on tariff makers. It likewise was rough on deans. Each house gets a new dean as a consequence of the election returns. Smoot, with five consecutive six-year terms to his credit, will be displaced by Borah, who came to the Senate just 25 years ago. Gilbert Haugen, of McNary-Haugen fame, who has been a member of the House since 1899, went down to defeat in the Iowa landslide. The new dean will be Representative Edward W. Pou, of North Carolina, who has been serving in the House since 1901.

The roll call of the elder statesmen in both houses is badly tattered. Death, defeat and voluntary retirement have eliminated an unusual number of the old-timers in the last two or three years. Jack Garner ranks next to Pou in seniority in the House, but it is presumed he will give up his seat to become Vice President on March 4, as a consequence of which Henry Rainey, of Illinois, the white-haired Democratic floor leader, will be second in line in length of service.

In the Senate, virtually all the Old Guardsmen have been eliminated. Senator Fletcher, of Florida, and Ellison Smith, of South Dakota, both Democrats, rank next to Borah. George Norris is the next Republican, following Borah in length of service, and George hasn't supported the Republican ticket in years. The senior regular Republican in the Senate after March 4, strange to relate, will be "Young Freddie" Hale, of Maine, who entered in 1917.

The "baby" member of the Senate, as I understand it, will be Gov. Russell, of Georgia. He is 34 years old. He will displace "Young Bob" La Follette, who has held the honor of being the youngest member since his election seven years ago, when he was just 30.

Thursday.

THE esteemed savant, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, is demanding the reorganization and "liberalization" of the Republican party. He fears for its future. In view of the crushing defeat it sustained on November 8, the good doctor warns that there is danger it will disappear from the American political scene after the fashion of the Whig party in the fifties.

Dr. Butler, in my opinion, is needlessly alarmed. The Republican party is a tough old institution. It has been defeated before, and it always comes back with renewed vigor. In fact, a good licking now and then seems to be just the tonic the party needs. It goes off in a corner, nurses its wounds, develops new blood and returns to the fray with refreshed strength.

I recall particularly the terrible drubbing it received in 1912. President Taft polled only a little more than 3,000,000 popular votes, carried just two States—Vermont and Utah—and won exactly eight electoral votes. The Bull Moose party, it was said, had permanently displaced it. The Republican party, many sage observers contended, would be relegated to a minor role and would eventually disappear from American politics.

Dr. Butler ought to remember that vividly, because he was made President Taft's vice presidential running mate that year, after the death of Vice President Sherman. But there was still plenty of life left in the grand old party. Four years later it virtually swallowed up the Bull Moose party, staged a sensational comeback under Charles Evans Hughes, and came within an eyelash of winning the Presidency again. Eight years later it recaptured complete control of the Federal Government by the largest popular plurality in the history of the country.

Four years ago, I remember, many political experts were predicting the disintegration of the Democratic party after Al Smith's defeat. The Republicans had rolled up a popular majority in excess of 6,000,000 and broken all records in the electoral college. And now observe the Democratic Party today.

Both parties, in fact, have an amazing vitality and they always manage to survive the dire forecasts of the prophets after election. The Republican party on November 8 polled more than 15,000,000 votes. When the final returns are counted, they probably will show that Mr. Hoover's vote in defeat was larger than Calvin Coolidge's landslide plurality in 1924.

Keeping in mind these considerations, I expect to see the Republican party very much alive and kicking for many more years. I am willing to hazard at least half of my next year's mileage allowance that it will make a serious dent in the Democratic congressional majority two years hence, and four years from now, well, who knows, who knows?

THE DIPLOMATIC POUCH

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

Authors.

THE greatness of a literary figure like Paul Claudel is often so eminent that he tends to overshadow other literary members of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington. Several other diplomats have outstanding works of profound research and long study which, unfortunately, do not get so well known because of the recondite nature of the book or because of the restricted appeal of their volumes.

Particularly is this literary activity true in the members of the Latin-American countries. The Chilean Ambassador, Don Miguel Cruchaga, for example, is now completing his monumental study of international law in three volumes, which will shortly be issued by the Carnegie Endowment. This is the fourth study of the problems in international relations which the learned Chilean jurisconsult has written. The present work will in all probability be the most modern interpretation of the new factors in world relations which have arisen out of the post-war conditions. The foreword will be written by Dr. James Brown Scott, of the Carnegie Endowment, and each volume is expected to be more than 700 pages.

Ambassador Cruchaga has been able to finish this international legal study despite the requirements of his position as umpire in the various claims between Mexico and Spain, Italy and Germany. His legal decisions in this long period will soon be issued in book form. After he had completed his decisions in Mexico, the Mexican government made the Chilean Ambassador the first civilian in a new order, the Order of Aguila Azteca.

Guatemala.

The Minister of Guatemala, Dr. Adrian Recinos, is a modest literary worker. In his early days he was the author of a short history of philosophy which is now adopted by the high schools of his country as a textbook. However, the attractions of the political arena were more appealing than the tranquillity of the literary study, and since his appointment here as minister, Dr. Recinos has had little opportunity for creative literary work.

Venezuela.

THE diplomatic representative of Gen. Gomez in the United States was one of the author of several legal volumes, which have had very little popularity outside of a limited circle on account of their ponderous, heavy style. Dr. Arcaya himself was once a judge of the supreme court of Venezuela and his legalistic background has served to complicate his literary style and make it difficult.

However, the counselor of the Venezuelan Legation, Dr. Luis Sinurion, and the secretary, Dr. Pedro Rivero, had written poems of a deep mystical nature, evidently inspired by the "Anonce Paite a Marie" of French Ambassador Claudel.

Haiti.

The Haitian Minister, Dantes Bellegarde, is the anomaly of the Pan-American Union. While all his other colleagues speak in Spanish, including even Portuguese-speaking Brazilian Ambassador Lima e Silva, Haitian Minister Bellegarde speaks only French. This accounts for some very amusing incidents sometimes, as on the recent occasion, every one smiled benignly after he had finished a fiery address, which was in reality a fiery criticism of the American policy in Haiti, as they thought he had been merely expressing his warm approval of Secretary Stimson.

Minister Bellegarde writes a very pure and limpid French. He has confined himself chiefly to political subjects and is the corresponding member of several French literary societies.

Honduras.

"Let my lyre be silent." This was the apostrophe addressed to his poetic muse by Honduran Minister Celeo Davila after he had decided to leave his post as vice consul in New Orleans and return to Tegucigalpa and enter political life. Up to that time the minister had been the author of several poems which had more than the usual merit of such youthful effusions. His friends have urged him to continue, now that the Conservative candidate for president, Senor Carias, has been elected.

Ecuador.

IN Gonzalo Zaldumbide the Ecuadorian government have not only an efficient minister but a critic of the Spanish language whose genius is acknowledged even by authorities of Spanish learned societies.

Minister Zaldumbide has a flawless, polished style in Spanish which has been compared by some critics to the English of Max Beerbohm. The same crispness, the same conciseness, that effort for the exact meaning with the least words, characterizes his studies.

In particular he has written a criticism of the works of Montalvo, which bids fair to outlast the subjects criticized. Montalvo was a prominent figure in the literary life of Ecuador but it is often said that many people know Montalvo better through Zaldumbide than they would know him through reading his own books.

He often attributes his lack of production to a painstaking effort for perfection, which has resulted in seriously affecting his literary output. Incidentally, Minister Zaldumbide is one of the best dressed men in the Diplomatic Corps.

Paraguay.

Dr. Pablo M. Ynsfran, Charge d'Affaires of Paraguay, made a literary study of his country under the title of "Contemporaneous Paraguay," which was very well received in his own country.

Bolivia.

Dr. Enrique Pinot, the present minister, once wrote a book about the Chaco which almost created a diplomatic incident. The book contained some very frank criticisms of the United States and particularly of Maj. Gen. Frank McCoy and Assistant Secretary of State Francis White, for their part in the conciliation commission of 1929.

Flares, Century Old, Used in Celebration

Dogliani, Italy, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Matches 100 years old were used to light candles and cigarettes at a celebration here in honor of Domenico Ghigliano, their manufacturer.

Dogliani credits Ghigliano, a native son, with being the inventor of the sulphur match. Similar claims have been made by others, but Dogliani is so convinced that it has erected a monument to its townman.

The first match broke into flame at the second strike. Other honor guests were allowed to strike the remaining ones, all of which were good.

Ghigliano was a poor chemist when he produced his first match. Thereafter he manufactured them in boxes of twelve. The box used in the celebration was part of his first output.

MAN O' NATURE

By EDGAR A. GUEST

Along the way where I chanced to stray
An artist chap I met.
His easel stood, near a patch of wood,
With paint was his canvas wet,
But he said to me: "This you mustn't see.
It is far from finished yet."

"Oh," said I, "let me cast an eye
On the picture just begun,
For it must be fair, as the scene out there
With the autumn coming on."
"Come back," said he, "in a month and see
This thing when my work is done."

Then I thought I heard a twittering bird
Perched high in a nearby tree
Say: "Men must choose their tints and hues
And most particular be,
For the finished task is the thing they ask
That God will wait to see.

"But nature wields in the open fields
Her brushes of rare delight,
And never says: 'Wait, till some later date
And I'll show you a rarer sight,'
But from start to last, where man's eyes are cast
Her landscapes seem just right."

Names of Women Canvassed Fit for High Political Positions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Agitation for the appointment of a woman member of the President's Cabinet is not unusual at this stage of governmental transition. For some time the peculiar fitness of Miss Frances Perkins for the position of Secretary of Labor has been extolled. She is Industrial Commissioner of the State of New York and in both experience and ability is said to be well fitted for the post. Miss Perkins' qualifications were praised by Mrs. William Dick Sporborg, president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, at its annual meeting in New York.

Mrs. Sporborg does not want to see any "sentimental" appointment made. When a woman is named to the Cabinet it must be the recognition of a woman whose record in public service will stand without criticism for ability and successful achievement, she says. She wants it understood that she approves of election or appointment to political office only for women who are at least as well qualified as men for those offices. Mrs. Sporborg's first choice for a cabinet post is Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, believing that she would represent all women in such a position as she did in her work for international peace and in the suffrage movement.

The names of others mentioned before the federation meeting as capable of filling an official position with distinction included Judge Florence Allen, of Ohio, a lawyer who would "give genuine service as Assistant Attorney General." Both former Representatives Ruth Bryan Owen and Ruth Hanna Simms were suggested as women experienced in public life who could fill a Federal position with credit. Another name put forward was that of Mrs. Nellie Taylor Ross, former Governor of Wyoming, and vice chairman of the Democratic national committee.

Mrs. Sporborg apparently expressed the sentments of the 400 New York clubwomen delegates when she said: "What women ask for is to be judged by their achievements and not to have one of their number chosen for the Cabinet just because 'it would be a good thing to appoint a woman.'"

Internationalism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For fourteen years our little world has been lost in a fog so dense that none of its rulers have seemed to know for what port they were steering. Memory recalls that our last Democratic President did his best.

Telegraphs and airplanes loudly preach not old isolation and independence, but internationalism and interdependence. We may hope that our recent disavowal of these ancient impolicies may bring this long suffering world a new deal, commerce unhampered, friendships renewed, yes, even disarmament, the recognition of Russia, and the taking our rightful part in President Wilson's institutions, the world court and the League of Nations, neither being "entangling alliances," but both designed to disentangle international troubles and prevent idiotic war.

How internationalism can benefit the whole world our very efficient universal postal conventions and conveniences witness.

Yours for an open mind, a square Wilsonian deal and success to our new steersman.

FUNERAL TOMORROW FOR SENATOR JONES

Heart Disease Takes Author of "Five and Ten" Dry Enforcement Law.

Seattle, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A career as a spokesman for the State of Washington in national affairs that spanned all but 9 of the 43 years of Statehood ended here today when death came to Senator Wesley L. Jones, chairman of the Senate appropriations committee and Republican whip in that body.

The 69-year-old senator died in a private sanitarium, where he had gone for a rest after the rigors of the recent campaign. He had been defeated for reelection by Homer T. Bone, Tacoma Democrat.

His friends said he died of "exhaustion." Physicians attributed death to a strain upon his heart from a kidney ailment. His wife, an only son, Harry B. Jones, Seattle attorney; a daughter, Mrs. Arthur Coffin; four grandchildren; a half brother, W. P. Guthrie, Yakima attorney, and a sister, Mrs. Ray Coleman, of Decatur, Ill., survive.

Son Advised Him to Rest.

Funeral services will be held here Monday afternoon.

Senator-elect Bone endeavored to reach Jones yesterday to pay his respects before leaving on a trip, but learned the senator was able only to see members of his family.

The senator's son recounted how he had tried to get his father to take a rest after a series of operations three years ago, but had been unsuccessful.

During the last session of Congress, Jones held daily hearings for six weeks on the economy bill. Then after that strenuous session he came home to begin the hardest fight of his many battles for reelection.

Made 4,000-Mile Trip.

Most of his speeches during a 4,000-mile campaign trip through the State were in behalf of the national administration. Friends begged him to rest, to return to Washington, but he refused. "How can I leave the party now when it needs me so badly?" He asked.

Last night his son told him he had received a telegram from Representative William B. Oliver, of Alabama, his golfing partner, urging him to get well so they could play together again.

"Tell him I'm trying," said the senator.

After the election the senator failed more and more. At times, his son said, he thought he was campaigning again or receiving reports at his desk in Washington.

Jones was best known nationally as a dry advocate and author of the "five and ten" prohibition enforcement law, but associates said although his name was attached to it, the measure was drawn up by the Department of Justice. He was also known for the merchant marine acts of 1920 and 1928.

Gov. Roland A. Hartley, Republican, is expected to name a successor to serve until March 4.

Capitol Flag at Half-Staff For Senator Wesley Jones

Democratic and Republican Colleagues Join in Praise of Appropriations Committee Chairman; Vice President Names 15 to Attend Funeral.

(Associated Press.)

The Capitol flag was lowered to half staff yesterday for one of the Senate's oldest and most respected members—Wesley L. Jones, of Washington.

With evident feeling, his Democratic and Republican colleagues voiced regret at the passing of the stern and hard-working chairman of the important appropriations committee.

The death of Senator Jones leaves the almost evenly balanced political line-up of the Senate unchanged. His Republican seat for the remainder of the term in the approaching short session is expected to be filled by another Republican, since the governor of Washington, who has power of appointment, is a member of that party.

Senator Fletcher (Democrat), Florida, who entered the Senate with Mr. Jones almost 24 years ago, said: "One of the most lovable, conscientious, able and energetic members of the Senate has passed. The Nation and the Senate will miss him."

Senator Borah, of Idaho, said: "Senator Jones was one of the most useful men in public life. I have known Senator Jones since he was a boy in southern Illinois. He was a man of spotless character and devoted to the things which he thought were best for the people."

Senator Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona, another veteran, echoed the expressions of other colleagues. He said: "Senator Jones was a brave, incorruptible, diligent public servant. His death is a distinct loss to the Nation and the State."

Vice President Curtis yesterday named fifteen senators to attend the funeral.

The committee is composed of Senators Dill, Washington; Smoot and King, Utah; Borah and Thomas, Idaho; Walsh and Wheeler, Montana; Johnson and Shortridge, California; Kendrick and Carey, Wyoming; McNary and Steiwer, Oregon, and Bratton and Cutting, New Mexico.

By coincidence, the Senate appropriations committee now has lost both its top-ranking Republican and Democrat within a year. Only last spring Senator William J. Harris, of Georgia, died after a lingering illness. He topped the minority members and would have been in line for the chairmanship with the Democrats organizing the Seventy-third Congress.

JAPAN REJECTS LYTTON PLAN ON POLICIES FOR MANCHUKUO

represent his government when the Far Eastern question is taken up next week by the Council of the League of Nations.

Dr. Matsuoka called on the American delegate. Mr. Davis also had a discussion with Frederic M. Sackett, American Ambassador to Germany, who stopped off here on his way to Berlin. Their conversation concerned the impending world economic conference. Mr. Sackett is a member of the committee arranging the program for that parley.

President Eamon de Valera of the Irish Free State, who will preside over the League Council session, arrived in Geneva today, as did numerous other council members.

The present council schedule calls for consideration first of lesser matters, with discussion of the Lytton report on the Manchurian question beginning probably on Wednesday.

Boycott by China.

China's use of the boycott against Japan is expected to be a subject of hot contention when the council of the League of Nations, by its examination of the Lytton report, resumes on Monday its efforts to reestablish peaceful relations between China and Japan.

The boycott is regarded by the Chinese as perhaps their most effective weapon against Japan, since Japan depends to a large degree upon exports to China for ecenomic prosperity.

The Japanese have again and again protested against the Chinese use of the boycott against Japanese goods, and have repeatedly demanded from China assurances that boycott would be forbidden by official decree.

The activities of "anti-foreign societies" in interfering with foreign trade, the Japanese declare, "constitutes not only an intolerable breach of treaty, but also a grave insult to the countries involved." A Japanese memorandum to the Lytton Commission makes it clear that they consider the phrase "countries involved" to include the United States, Great Britain, France, and Italy, as well as Japan.

Answer of Chinese.

Complaining that the Chinese authorities refuse to suppress the boycott movement, this memorandum adds: "For the protection of their own important rights and interests, there can be no other course open to the powers than to undertake the task (boycott suppression) themselves by exercising the right of self defense."

The Chinese reply that the boycott will disappear when the cause of the boycott is removed. The boycott, moreover, they assert, is supported by article 16 of the League covenant "as a normal weapon of coercion against states which have resorted to armed force."

"The boycott of Japanese goods and enterprises beginning from July, 1931, is pursued, generally speaking, in a legitimate manner and under form which does not involve any responsibility of the Chinese government," says a Chinese memorandum submitted to the Lytton Commission.

"The anti-Japanese boycott was an act of retaliation replying to the serious breach of international engagements, with regard to China, of which Japan should be held guilty.

Defense of Boycott.

"This form of retaliation is recognized and permitted as a legitimate method of pressure by international practice, by juristic theories, and by article 16 of the League covenant."

The Lytton commission studied the operation of the boycott and discussed it at length, but was careful not to take a definite position.

"No one can deny the right of the individual Chinese to refuse to buy Japanese goods," says the commission's report.

"Nor is it possible to deny that the Chinese, acting individually or even in organized bodies, are entitled to make propaganda for the boycott.

"Whether, however, the organized application of the boycott of trade of one particular country is consistent with friendly relations or in conformity with treaty obligations, is rather a problem of international law than a subject for our inquiry."

Then, recognizing the intimacy and importance of Sino-Japanese economic relations, the report concludes on this subject:

"The interdependence of the trade of those two neighboring countries and the interests of both, call for an economic rapprochement, but there can be no such rapprochement so long as the political relations between them are so unsatisfactory as to call forth the use of military force by one and the economic force by boycott by the other."

21 UNION VETERANS PRAISED BY HOOVER

Boys of 1861 Banquet on Gettysburg Dedication Anniversary.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp the boys are marching——"

A little band of 21 Union veterans of the Civil War joined in the chorus of this famous old song at a banquet last night at the Shoreham Hotel, given by Lincoln Camp, No. 2, Sons of Union Veterans, in commemoration of the dedication of Gettysburg battlefield 68 years ago today.

The gathering represented all the members of the Department of the Potomac of the Union War Veterans that could be found for the annual reunion. Attired in evening clothes and uniforms they presented an impressive picture as they sat around a banquet table—thirteen of them with sons—wearing each a rose sent by Mrs. Herbert Hoover.

The youngest veteran was 84, the oldest 94. After the dinner, dancing was announced. Only a few remained, and these hardy "boys" went home early. Lieut. Col. Grant 3d, grandson of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, commander of the Union Army, was toastmaster at the dinner.

The veterans listened attentively, with shining eyes, as the following message from President Hoover was read: "I send cordial greetings to the Union Veterans of the Civil War, in whose honor Lincoln Camp, Sons of Union Veterans, is giving a banquet this evening, and every good wish for continuing years in which to enjoy the deserved honors paid them for their service of country.

"Their lives have been a living expression of that noble dedication of self to the preservation of our institutions, which was voiced by President Lincoln 69 years ago today."

The veterans present were Commander William F. Dorsey, 84; John Middleton, 90; John T. Ryan, 87; Maj. Gen. John L. Clem, 81; John M. Kline, 89; E. D. Godfrey, 91; Albert M. Lathrop, 91; Fred Mixer, 87; Oliver M. Ong, 86; J. H. Shepard, 84; Newton Charles, 88; Hosea B. Moulton, 90; H. T. Dunbar, 89; John Joy Edson, 87; E. W. Weaver, 92; Henry A. Johnson, 87; Conris Parker, 94; William Doherty, 86; Gen. John R. King, past commander, 89; George T. Leech, 86, and Orange Ferman, 93.

William Davis, also colored, convicted with the other Davis in one of the cases, was given from 5 to 10 years. John R. Fitzpatrick, assistant United States attorney, prosecuted the pair.

Chicago Attorney Relates How Robins Was Located

(Copyright, 1932, by the Associated Press.)

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The complete account of the events leading to the discovery of Col. Raymond Robins' whereabouts was unfolded tonight by Salomon Levinson, Chicago attorney and intimate friend of the welfare worker.

Precipitator of it all is the letter to Mr. Levinson from a 13-year-old boy in Whittier, N. C., Carl Byrd Fisher, whose belief that a mountain prospector was in reality Robins was the prime key in solving the months' old mystery.

The youth wrote to Mr. Levinson after seeing the attorney's name linked in news dispatches and magazine articles as an associate of Col. Robins.

This letter was received in Mr. Levinson's Chicago office Monday. He was in New York and his secretary telephoned him of its presence. It was forwarded to New York.

Text of Letter.

The letter from young Fisher was addressed "Salomon O. Levinson, Chicago lawyer and peace advocate, Chicago, Ill.," and the letter read as follows:

"Whittier, N. C., Nov. 11, 1932.

"Col. Salomon O. Levinson: I believe that Col. Raymond Robins is here at Whittier; has beenghere about seven (7) weeks.

"His picture came out in the newspaper, and I have seen him and I think he is your man. He has a good education and is a world traveler.

"When he came here he was slick shaven and now he has a beard, and wears an overall jacket suit.

"He says he was a personal friend of Teddy Roosevelt, and is a personal friend of Mr. Herbert C. Hoover.

"He gives his name as Mr. R. H. Rogers.

"Please (underlined) send one of your men that know him well, or come yourself, to Whittier, North Carolina.

"Please don't use my name in any report to the newspaper, or give me away. If there is any reward out for finding him please give it to me if he is the right man.

"Hurry (underlined) for several may see his picture and he may get away.

"My address,

"Carl Byrd Fisher,

"Whittier, N. C., box 52."

Mr. Levinson took the letter early Wednesday to the New York office of Amos W. W. Woodcock, prohibition administrator. Whittier, N. C., was reached on the telephone and through the postmaster, checked the authenticity of the letter writer's address. From this man, it was learned the letter writer was a boy; that he could be reached as soon as school was out.

At midafternoon, the boy was reached and the letter verified.

Relatives Notified.

Mr. Levinson, detained in New York on legal conferences, notified relatives of Col. Robins in Brooklyn and a nephew, John Dreier, was sent to North Carolina to meet someone from the prohibition enforcement office.

The Washington prohibition office was notified and in turn, Prohibition Agent J. Ed Kanipe, of Asheville, was ordered to Whittier to meet Robins' nephew and to find the prospector and make identification, if he turned out to be Col. Robins.

The Chicago attorney was hesitant to make public his part in the clearing up of the mystery and did so, he said, only after several inaccurate accounts appeared. He said all the credit should go to the boy in Whittier.

didn't know me," she said after the one-sided reunion.

"Hello, Raymond," she greeted him. Robins turned to Dr. M. A. Griffin and said, "I don't know the lady." Robins was sitting up when he saw his wife and was still dressed in his overalls and had a heavy beard.

Mrs. Robins said physicians have not yet diagnosed his case. John Dreier, a nephew, said yesterday the prohibition leader was a victom of amnesia.

"I had no difficulty in recognizing him. Any one who has ever heard his voice could not forget t," Mrs. Robins said.

The prohibition crusader and friend of President Hoover was wearing a two-months' beard and an overall jumper suit, the only garb he was known to wear during his stay in Whittier, when he sprang lightly from a motor car and entered the hospital after a two-hour ride on wet, mountain highways.

"Col. Raymond Robins is at present at Norburn Hospital in Asheville, and under the care of Dr. Mark A. Griffith, of Asheville," a statement by Dreier said.

"Dr. Griffin, who is now in charge of the case, states that it is absolutely impossible to give a correct diagnosis of the case until further observation."

Sorry to Leave Mountains.

Two Federal prohibition agents acted as an escort on the drive from Whittier to Asheville.

He was reported by one of them to have made reference to recurring lapses of memory.

"I was getting along fine until two days ago, when it began to come back on me," he was quoted.

The agents said Robins expressed sorrow at leaving Whittier, a town of 500 population in Swain County, where he had lived as "Raymond Rogers" in a $4-a-week boarding house.

"I hate to go and have the best peace I have known in ten years torn up," one of them reported he said.

They said Col. Robins seemed to have no memory of his past before his arrival in Whittier as a bus passenger shortly after he dropped from sight in New York while presumably preparing to go to Washington for a conference with President Hoover.

Mingled With Indians.

Vernon McHan, her brother, also was depressed. He had taught "Rogers" to drive an automobile and had seen much of their lodger during his ten weeks' stay.

Vernon said Col. Robins had spent most of his daylight hours in long tramps over the nearby mountains, frequently hiking to the Cherokee Indian Reservation several miles away and sitting in with the Indian councils. The youth said the colonel told him he planned to write a book about the Indians.

Whittier residents were divided in their opinion of who first connected the stranger "Rogers," known to them as a retiring prospector, whose principal public activity was the delivery of a number of political speeches in support of President Hoover and the prohibition cause, with the wealthy Col. Robins.

Boy Made Discovery.

Some of the residents said the stranger's identity was suspected within two days of his arrival here, while the newspapers of the land were still carrying lengthy accounts of the disappearance and the futile search, and publishing the various theories to explain it. These included kidnaping by bootleggers or Russian imperialists, supposed enemies of Robins because of his support of prohibition and his advocacy of Soviet recognition.

Most of them, however, were inclined to give the credit to a red-headed boy of 13. Carl Fisher, member of a Sunday school class which was taken on hikes by the McHan boarder, claimed to have noted a resemblance in their hike leader to newspaper pictures of Col. Robins and notified prohibition authorities at Washington.

Upon receipt of the "tip" agents were sent to Whittier, with the resultant confirmation of Carl's belief.

Some citizens thought Frank Redmond, the town barber, was the first to recognize the similarity of the stranger to newspaper pictures. They said the barber received the impression while Col. Robins was a customer in the shop.

Crude Wooden Altar Built by Col. Robins

Asheville, N. C., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A crude wooden altar surmounted by a cross was built by Col. Raymond Robins in the mountains near Whittier, a Federal officer, who asked that his name not be disclosed, said tonight.

Residents of Whittier, the officer said, reported that Robins frequently visited the altar, but said they did not intrude upon him while he was there, presumably worshiping.

DEAD MYSTERY MAN MISSING FROM BANK

Wife Identifies Cashier Who Vanished and Began New Life in Richmond.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—He died on November 6 in Memorial Hospital, where he had told attendants his name was Harry S. Lund, but today his wife and daughter, who came here to disinter the body, said he was Regnar Nortvig, a former Minneapolis bank cashier. The body will be buried in Minnesota.

Police here said that Nortvig left Minneapolis two years ago, after writing a letter to his wife saying he was going away to end his life. He came to Richmond as Harry S. Lund and obtained employment with a directory company.

When he died last month, among his personal effects were found the names of three girls, Erling, Kerna and Unger. Directory company officials, who recalled that Lund had often been seen consulting directories issued in Minneapolis, communicated with authorities in that city.

The man's identification was assured today when Mrs. Nortvig, a daughter, and the Rev. P. L. Bjerre, superintendent of the Bureau of Rehabilitation of Minneapolis, arrived here to confer with local authorities.

Permission to disinter the body was granted by W. Brownley Foster, director of public welfare.

Richmond police said that Minneapolis authorities had notified them that Lund was $200 short in his accounts when he left that city.

EINSTEIN WRECKS ANOTHER THEORY

(Prof. Einstein will sail December 10 for California, where he will resume work at Mount Wilson Observatory.)

Using homely examples, Prof. Einstein explained that absolute measuring of the universe's movement was impossible except in relation of one body's movement to another. His calculations relating to the speed expansion of the heavenly system increased previous accepted conceptions some tenfold.

The famous scientist made no effort to estimate how long this expansion has been progressing, but said it would contract, citing a rubber ball's expansions and contractions to illustrate his point.

Throughout the lecture, Prof. Einstein continually hammered home the fact that Euclid's conception of geometry was of little use to present day astronomers.

Using the example of a merry-go-round to illustrate a point in Lorenz's theory, Prof. Einstein said speed determined the length of bodies.

"Length laid along the radius of the merry-go-round does not change with speed, but, as speed increases, the length laid around the circumference becomes shorter," he said.

From this he drew the conclusion that the accepted conception of "pi" should not read 3.1415926, but "rather something higher," depending upon speed of the bodies.

Through example he sought to show the weight of masses has a decided influence on the geometric structure of space. He explained the ability to measure astronomical distances by measuring strength of light reaching us, through the wave lengths of the observed spectrum.

'ACTION IS UNLIKELY ON MAPES PROGRAM

week of Congress. The bureau had previously rewritten all of the Mapes bills for the Senate District committee.

Even if the Senate District committee agreed to the bureau's revision and the Senate enacted the rewritten bills, they would have to go back to the House to be passed on again in their revised form. Valuable time, that Congress can not afford to give at this short session, would be required, it was said.

The merger bill may have brighter prospects in store for it next session. It is pointed out that William Gibbs McAdoo, who formerly was retained as counsel in the interests of a local traction consolidation, will be an influential member of the Senate after March 4. Senator John J. Blaine (Republican), Wisconsin, the principal opponent of the bill, is a "lame duck," and will not be back next session.

Matters of a national and international nature counted on to crowd out the Mapes and merger programs, include the question of war debt revision, prospective revenue and economy measures, Volstead act modification, Philippine independence, and the various appropriation bills—a big bite for a short session.

EPILEPTIC FUGITIVE SEIZED IN MURDER

home, but the young woman, still ill and hysterical, was unable positively to identify him, police said.

At headquarters, neither Guisinger nor Miss Emma Dahnke, companion of Jordan, was able to identify Varecha positively.

Alcock, however, told reporters he was certain "we are on the right track." The youth, himself, denied either the slaying or attack and declared: "It's a bum rap."

Varecha had been trailed to the theater by the patron of a nearby barber shop who recognized him and summoned police.

Mr. Jordan was slain as he sought to protect his woman companion from a robber as they sat in his automobile at a South Side street corner. The highwayman fled after the shooting, and a short while later Mr. Guisinger and Miss Henry were held up only a few blocks away by a youth whose description fitted Mr. Jordan's slayer and, police said, Varecha.

Mission Deluged With Dinner Pleas

List of Thanksgiving Day Applicants for Food Is Closed.

Swamped with applications for Thanksgiving aid from unemployed families in Washington, the Central Union Mission was compelled to close its list yesterday because of lack of sufficient funds.

A total of 678 applications for the Thanksgiving Day baskets of food to be distributed Wednesday was received up to the time when Superintendent John S. Bennett found it necessary to call a halt. Unless there are further funds forthcoming he said he fears that many families will have to be overlooked.

On Thanksgiving Day the mission is arranging to feed 550 jobless men promptly at noon. They will have a pork dinner with all the "trimmings," and members of the Women's Guild of the mission will help serve. Also, the 40 boys and girls being cared for by the Children's Emergency Home will have a special dinner, including turkey, in their dining room.

Daylight Burglar Refuses to Hurry

A leisurely burglar, who believed in the old adage: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again," yesterday entered the home of Mrs. C. H. Kyle, 14 West Lenox street, Chevy Chase, Md., and decamped with a raincoat, an undetermined amount of jewelry and other loot. He left his old overcoat in exchange.

The burglar arrived in broad daylight and looked the house over. He then went to the cellar door and broke in. Unable to get up into the house because of the stoutness of the locked door at the head of the stairs, he borrowed a pair of tin snips from the cellar and moved to the sun parlor at the front, where he forced a lock and entered.

A good description of the man was given Montgomery County police of the Bethesda Substation by the neighbors, who saw him prowling around the house.

MONTGOMERY GIRDS FOR HUNGER MARCH

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 9103 Conn. Ave., North Chevy Chase, Md. Telephone Wisconsin 4206.

In preparation for possible disturbances when the "hunger marchers" arrive in Washington with a possibility of their overflowing into the county, the Montgomery County police are to be equipped with tear gas and trained in its use at once. The county police also are to be provided with radio cars so that patrolmen may be dispatched to disturbances quickly.

Fearing a recurrence of the dumping of members of the group into the county such as happened in the forcible eviction of the B. E. F., County Commissioner John B. Diamond, in charge of police, is making preparation for the handling of such an event, in cooperation with Chief of Police Alvie A. Moxley and other county authorities.

Conference on Tear Gas.

County officials hope that their precautions will be unneeed, but declare they are not taking any chances. They especially are anxious that the Federal and District authorities keep them posted as to whether or not evictions of such groups into the county are contemplated in order that proper facilities for maintaining order may be mobilized.

Commissioner Diamond and Chief of Police Moxley will confer tomorrow with tear gas officials in order that necessary supplies can be purchased at once and the necessary training of the county policemen started. The county has a force of some 28 men, most of whom have seen war service and practically all of whom are dead shots. It is not expected that the training course will require as much time as when given to untrained men but the county officials want to be on the safe side. The suburban area of Montgomery County is too valuable to take chances with demonstrators bent on doing damage, officials say, and a few dollars spent on equipment for handling such situations will be well spent if they provide immunity from damage and loss of life to this section, Commissioner Diamond said.

Radio Equipment Tested.

Radio equipment for the police cars is being tested now and will be installed if the county cars can achieve satisfactory reception from the Washington Police Department broadcasting station. It is understood that the Washington Police Department is heartily in favor of the move which would provide an auxiliary arm to the metropolitan force and is willing to cooperate as much as possible.

The radio equipment will be of especial aid to the police of the Rockville headquarters, which serves practically an entirely rural section of great size. The Bethesda police have been provided with a series of signals which result in prompt answers to calls from that section, but other sections of the county do not have this feature save in a very limited fashion and would be greatly benefited by the radio apparatus. It is planned to install the sets on one car in each precinct with several other special duty cars also equipped.

Appetite of Race Horse Makes Railroad Fret

Possibilities that Song of Songs may be sold for a song to satisfy the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for his freight charges and feed looms in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville, Md. The horse won several races at Canadian tracks, racing experts at Rockville aver.

The bill of complaint alleges that Adam Bennett shipped the horse to Silver Spring from Outremont, Canada, and neglected to remove the horse from the custody of the railroad and to pay the freight charges, even though he had been notified by registered mail that the horse had been ready for delivery for five days. Judge Charles W. Woodward will take the plea under advisement.

Montgomery Relief Workers Rushed

Announce Only Clothing and Toys in Good Condition Are Acceptable.

The home welfare committee of the Montgomery County Social Service League has announced that only clothing and toys that are in useable condition will be accepted this year. Groups that are collecting the articles are requested to sort toys and see that they are in good condition before sending them to the league headquarters in the Rockville courthouse.

Miss Estelle T. Moore, chairman, announced that the league staff is unable to collect clothing or packages since the workers are having a hard time keeping up with the demands on their services in alleviating actual distress but that the Bell Laundry has agreed to collect such packages in its trucks. Prospective donors are requested to call the laundry office at Bethesda and one of its trucks will stop on its next delivery run in that section.

The committee asks that canned foods especially be donated to the league. Miss Moore reported that 25 groups in the county are knitting and sewing for the league and that through cooperation of the American Red Cross nearly 6,000 yards of cloth made from Federal cotton has been made available to the committee for sewing into garments.

BISHOP TO PREACH AT CHRIST CHURCH

Bicentennial Observance Is Planned for Thanksgiving Service.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU. 907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va. Phone Alexandria 523.

Historic Christ Protestant Episcopal Church will hold its annual Thanksgiving service this year in connection with a special Bicentennial observance, at 11 o'clock Thursday morning, as George Washington was a pew holder in this church and his diary contains frequent mention of attending services in Christ Church.

The sermon will be by the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Bishop of Virginia, whose mother was born at Mount Vernon and was the daughter of John Augustine Washington, the last private owner of Mount Vernon. He is also the son of the late Right Rev. Beverley Dandridge Tucker, Bishop of Southern Virginia.

The rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. William Jackson Morton, invited Bishop Tucker to preach at this service, as the Bicentennial Commission had requested special services on Thanksgiving Day in the churches with which Washington was associated, and as he is a collateral descendant of Washington, was the logical clergyman for the occasion.

Dr. Morton has extended invitations to all Masonic bodies, patriotic and fraternal organizations to attend this service. The offering on this date is always given to the Alexandria Hospital and the Anne Lee Memorial Home of the Aged.

The Potomac Truck and Engine Company No 2 and Rescue Squad No. 1, of the Alexandria Fire Department, will hold an important meeting tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock, in the Potomac firehouse. The object of the meeting is to discuss the items in the proposed city budget affecting the fire department, prior to the public hearing.

A special meeting of all officers of the four Alexandria fire companies and two squads will be held on Tuesday evening for the same purpose.

Cooperative Body Ready to Convene

Home Improvement Drive in Virginia Will Be Described.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Probably the outstanding accomplishment during the past year of the civic and home improvement campaign in Virginia of the Cooperative Education Association, Statewide citizens' organization which opens its annual convention here Monday, was the reconditioning of a Methodist parsonage at White Hall, in Albermarle County.

Incidentally, Albemarle, under the leadership of Mrs. Bessie Dunn Miller, county chairman and county home demonstration agent, won one of the national prizes, the work being done in cooperation with the national organization, Better Homes in America. The association agreed a year ago to provide the leadership for the civic and home improvement campaign in this State.

The Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Episcopal churches, the Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs, merchants of Charlottesville, Men's Social Club; women's missionary societies, and the Virginia Public Service cooperated in the campaign, which required about a month's combined efforts, at a cost of $569.75.

FREEZES FORECAST FOR LOWER SOUTH

Alabama Is in Store for 16 Degrees as Rain-Laden Skies Turn Clear.

New Orleans, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The South buttoned its topcoat to the chin tonight as winter finally made a businesslike and determined drive to reach all sections of Dixie after a week of sporadic forays that brought blizzardlike conditions to scattered sections.

For the most part under crystal-clear skies that took the place of low-hanging clouds that recently brought sleet, snow and penetrating rains to many areas, the cold wave spread steadily tonight, predicted to bring freezing or below to the coasts of Louisiana and Mississippi, with a possible minimum of 16 degrees in interior Alabama.

Thirty-degree readings were reported early today at Little Rock and Memphis, and 32's at Nashville and Vicksburg, Miss., while various other cities had readings in the thirties. But these levels appeared likely to seem mild by comparison tonight as the Weather Bureau forecast temperatures of 24 to 28 degrees in Louisiana's sugar and trucking area, 18 to 25 in Mississippi, with subfreezing levels on the gulf coast; 16 to 30 degrees in Alabama, and 28 to 32 in northern Florida. Arkansas was warned of the approach of a "hard freeze," and cold wave signals were flown eastward in Tennessee, Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia and Kentucky.

Four Deaths in South.

The week's visitation of severe temperatures accounted for four deaths in the South. Two persons were killed when an automobile and bus collided in a snowstorm in Arkansas in the middle of the week, and two hunting guides lost their lives from exposure in the windswept duck marshes south of Port Arthur, Tex.

Indications pointed to a continuation of the cold spell through Sunday.

(Associated Press.)

Winter thrust a chill hand toward New England last night, with a cold wave pushing toward the northern part while storm warnings flew from Eastport to Sandy Hook.

Sharp drops in temperature were forecast by the Weather Bureau for Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, observers explaining that extreme cold was not expected, although the mercury would huddle much lower than usual for mid-November.

Warmer Tomorrow.

The chilling will be brief, however, the bureau said, as warmer temperatures and cloudiness are expected tomorrow.

Colder weather is forecast for today in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, but not so severe as in the three States to the north. Rising temperatures and fair weather are due there tomorrow.

Northwest storm warnings were flying from Boston to the Virginia Capes last night, and the disturbance moving northeastward over New England caused a display of warnings from Boston on to Eastport.

The cold wave, Weather Bureau officials said, is following closely upon the heels of the disturbance, which passed over the District of Columbia early yesterday, bringing a cold rain.

This disturbance, described as moving very rapidly, is expected to be well up in the St. Lawrence River territory early today.

Culpeper Offering Electric Franchise

Bids Asked After Failure to Get Lower Rates From Utility.

Special to The Washington Post.

Culpeper, Va., Nov. 19.—The town council of Culpeper, following the failure to secure any definite or satisfactory reduction from the Virginia Public Service Co. in electric rates, has passed an ordinance advertising for bids for a franchise for a period of 10, 20 and 30 years, from November 15, 1933.

In preparation to meet any change that may be desired in event the present franchise holder, the Virginia Public Service Co., does not offer a substantial reduction in its present rates, the town has asked fn their bids for franchises that bids include the following: "To furnish and erect an electric power system in the Town of Culpeper and county, to supply electric lights, electric heat and electric power."

The council already has received numerous bids from various electrical construction companies for erecting a municipal power plant, and most of the eight members of the council have expressed themselves as being in favor of building such a plant if they can not secure a substantial reduction from their present rate.

Culpeper, Va., Nov. 19.—A total of 3,322 persons in Culpeper County, including both white and colored, are in need of some form of economic relief, according to the survey of the county made by Byrd Leavell in connection with the Culpeper welfare program for the coming winter.

The survey was completed during the last week and complete tabulation of figures by the Welfare Association indicates that much more work must be accomplished if it is to meet the needs of the county's unemployed and helpless.

Flier Attached to Akron Lands With Fuel Gone

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Losing contact with the dirigible Akron while flying above the clouds over the Chesapeake Bay yesterday, Lieut. Robert Larson, U. S. N., aviator, was forced to land in a pasture near here when his supply of gasoline became exhausted.

He planned to join the Akron at Kitty Hawk, N. C., today for the unveiling of the Wright Memorial, but because of bad flying weather was unable to take off. He said he would return to Lakehurst, N. J., when the weather improved.

P. U. C. 3-CENT FARE BRIEF TO BE FILED

D. C. Supreme Court to Get Data Alleging Traction Loss Unimportant.

Contentions that the small pecuniary loss suffered by the street railways and the Washington Rapid Transit Co. is not sufficient grounds to invalidate the order of the Public Utilities Commission establishing the 3-cent fare for school children will be set forth in a brief to be filed in District Supreme Court Tuesday by People's Counsel Richmond B. Keech and William A. Roberts, special counsel for the commission.

The brief, the filing of which was postponed on account of the absence of Mr. Roberts, is in support of a motion to dismiss the appeals of the three common carriers now before the court.

Four principal reasons why the court should sustain the motion of the commission and the people's counsel will be advanced in the document. Numerous legal precedents, supplementary arguments, and statistics on a year's record of the reduced fare will also be included.

It is the insistence of the commission counsel that neither the utilities body nor the court can question the constitutionality of the act which instructed the commission to establish the special fare. Moreover, they hold that the statute is sustainable as an exercise of police power or under the classification of a franchise tax. Congress, in addition, has the right to alter, amend or repeal any provisions of the charters of the two street railways though not of the bus company, the latter being a foreign corporation.

United States Supreme Court decisions are to be cited in support of the argument that education may come within the purview of police powers and that legislation of a wholesome nature may be constitutional even though it causes an agency to suffer a small pecuniary loss.

The brief will contain figures to show that within a year ending last September the Capital Traction Co.'s school children patronage gained 15 per cent while its loss in passengers as a whole was 25 per cent. The Washington Railway & Electric Co. likewise gained 16 per cent in children's fares, while losing 20 per cent on total passengers.

Special attention is to be called to the economic condition of the city and the compulsory school law. A burden will be placed upon the poorer parents of Washington if they are forced to pay the full adult fare for their children to and from school, the commission counsel contends.

The brief will also answer the arguments of the carriers regarding the manner of hearing held prior to the passage of the act and will advise the court that the appellants have not exhausted every remedy available to them before appealing from the commission's order.

NONE OF THAT IN THE NEW FISHER BODIES!

BODY by FISHER

Every Body by Fisher bears this emblem to the right and immediately below the right front door. Look for this emblem of Body by Fisher before you accept any motor car body.

No more drafts swirling around the necks of people in the back seats.

With the new Fisher Bodies on General Motors cars for 1933, soon to be presented, Fisher will introduce a ventilation system which automotive engineers term the most important contribution to motoring comfort and safety since closed bodies were first offered (by Fisher) in 1910.

This new ventilation system not only eliminates the annoying and harmful drafts which blow upon the occupants of conventional type cars, but prevents dangerous clouding of windshield and windows in wet or stormy weather.

It furnishes a constant flow of fresh air without a single discomforting draft. Used air and smoke are instantly carried outside the car. In addition, each person in the car can regulate the ventilation to suit his own desires, without discomfort to any other occupant. And, along with this revolutionary ventilation system, Fisher will offer more than a score of other improvements which add value to General Motors cars, the only cars with Body by Fisher.

Have a demonstration of this outstanding Fisher development before you buy any car. Learn how much Fisher and General Motors have increased values for 1933!

MODEL BOY SOUGHT IN VICIOUS SLAYING

Grandmother Fatally Beaten Pistol and Murder Novel Found in His Room.

Chicago, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A youth of high school age—the son of wealthy parents and a "model student" was sought tonight for what police termed one of the cruelest murders in Chicago's history.

The youth, 16-year-old Bert Arnold, was wanted for questioning about the killing of his grandmother, Mrs. Ellen Saxe, 60 years old, in the home of his parents.

Mrs. Saxe was beaten to death and her body dropped into a cistern. Elements of mystery suitable for a Scotland Yard "thriller" were contained in the evidence—heel prints of a woman's shoe in blood, fingerprints on two costly candelabra, and a missing automobile.

Possible Kidnaping Victim.

Police theorized young Arnold might possibly have been the victim of kidnapers who killed the elderly woman. They said, however, that evidence indicated Mrs. Saxe was killed by someone familiar with the Arnold home. Bert Arnold was the only member of the families whose activities were not accounted for at the time of the killing.

Young Arnold was last seen at 10 p. m. last night when he left a church dance in company with several other youths. He was driving Mrs. Saxe's automobile, the machine which was missing today.

Gruesome Passage Marked.

The youth's father examined his room today and found, he announced, a pistol, a bottle of liquor, and a murder mystery novel with a gruesome passage underlined.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold said they could not explain the pistol and liquor. Both they, his friends, and teachers of the fashionable Riverside Brookfield High School said they believed Bert to be an unusually dutiful and quiet boy.

John White, 18, a neighbor, said he saw an automobile he believed to be Mrs. Saxe's, stop before the Arnold home for 15 minutes shortly after 11 p. m. Three men went into the house, he said, but he recognized none of them.

Witnesses who talked with police today included Margaret Boudry, 16, and Norton Jonathan, 16, who rode to the dance with young Arnold, and Mrs. William H. Borchert, in charge of the affair. "He was very gay at the dance," Mrs. Borchert said. "He always impressed me as being thoroughly nice."

Inventor to Speak On Sea Refueling

Chain of Plane Depots Are Designed to Span Atlantic.

A system of mid-ocean service stations for airplanes will be explained by its inventor, Edward R. Armstrong, president of the Armstrong Seadrome Development Co., in the Healy Building of Georgetown University, Thirty-seventh and O streets northwest, at 8:15 p. m., Tuesday.

Mr. Armstrong will present an illustrated lecture under the auspices of the School of Foreign Service of the university. He will explain the details of plans for five seadromes for service to Europe, covering an air route of 3,000 miles, bringing Washington and Paris within 30 hours of each other.

Dr. James Brown Scott, of the Foreign Service School, will discuss the international law aspects of the project. Invitations have been extended to Government department represenatives interested in the technical and scientific phases of the project. Mr. Armstrong's plans are the result of seventeen years' work.

Dentists to Hear Gold Inlay Talks

Drs. Rice and Shelton to Read Papers Tuesday at Meeting.

Both the direct and the indirect method of making gold inlays will be covered in papers by Dr. Thomas J. Rice and Dr. Charles R. Shelton before the District of Columbia Dental Society, which meets Tuesday night at 8 o'clock at George Washington University. Rr. Rice will cover the direct method, while Dr. Shelton's paper will discuss the indirect method.

"This is a very important and practical subject to all of us," Dr. William I. Ogus, chairman of the essay committee, said yesterday, "and these two men have, as a result of several years' experience, attained results which will unquestionably be of vital interest to every member of the society."

FORESTRY CONTEST WINNERS SELECTED

Bruce and Petworth Schools Leaders in Preparing Nature Notebooks.

Winners of the third annual contest of forestry and nature notebooks in local public schools were announced yesterday by the American Forestry Association.

Bronze medals presented by the association to the two students submitting the best notebooks will be awarded to Betty Jane Meggers, 10 years old, of 2994 Brandywine street northwest, sixth grade student in the Ben W. Murch School, and to Norman Wertleb, of 333 H street northeast, a sixth grade pupil in the Madison School.

First prize for the best classroom notebook was awarded to grade 6A of the Bruce School, of which Miss E. L. Hinton is teacher. The prize for the most outstanding exhibit of individual pupils' notebooks goes to the Petworth School, where out of 164 children enrolled, 112 books of merit were submitted.

Handsome Bronze Plaque.

The Petworth School will receive the American Forestry Association bronze plaque mounted on black walnut, held last year by the Jackson School and the year before that by the Oyster School.

The medals and special honors will be awarded in the auditorium of the New National Museum at 3:30 p. m. on Monday, November 28. Books submitted by fifth and sixth grades in public schools of Washington and neighboring suburbs of Virginia and Maryland will be on exhibit at the museum all this week.

Judges in the contest announced they had great difficulty in choosing the winners from among a group of selected notebooks selected by a special committee of parents and teachers.

Specially Mentioned Books.

The judges made special mention of books prepared and submitted by Imogene Golden, grade 5A, of the Shepherd School; Suzanne Morse, of the Force School, whose water-color sketches aroused high enthusiasm; Tom Stone, of the Bancroft School, and Charles Wagoner, of the Brookland School. A page of drawings of fences in the latter student's notebook attracted considerable attention.

A close runner-up in the classroom notebooks was that of grade 5A in the Simmons School, of which Miss M. P. Knorl is teacher, while the Madison School, with 33 books submitted by 95 children, was seriously considered in competition with the Petworth School, it was learned.

The final judges in the contest were Miss Florence Ward, of the extension service of the Department of Agriculture; Colin H. Livingstone, first president of the Boy Scouts of America, and Dr. W. B. Bell, of the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture.

Dodge Officials Guests of Trew

General Sales Manager Reveals Features of 1933 Model.

Dealers and factory officials of the Dodge Bros. Corporation were the guests of J. B. Trew, president of the Trew Motor Co., distributors of the Dodge car in this territory, at a dinner in the Shoreham Hotel yesterday.

A Van Der Zee, general sales manager of the Dodge Bros. Corporation, the principal speaker, announced that the 1933 model will not be a four-cylinder car, as rumored, but a new type six-cylinder automobile. Motion pictures of the new car were shown.

The chassis of the new car is decidedly low without sacrificing road clearance, and is the first car to be equipped with superballoon tires as standard equipment, it was announced. Date of the public showing of the new model is to be announced.

200 Business Men to Join Police to Halt Crime Wave

Atlanta, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Two hundred business men are going to buckle on guns and patrol the streets as aids to Atlanta policemen in a civic drive to stop bandits who even dare to shoot citizens and rob offices within the shadow of police headquarters.

Chosen by business houses and approved by the police, they will report for duty the first of the week. Authorities are taking precautions against "every Tom, Dick and Harry" getting on the force and none will be accepted without certification of commercial firms as regards reputation, character and dependability.

One hundred and twenty policemen are working overtime shifts but in spite of that, three Negroes wounded W. O. Cannon and robbed him and a companion of $190 four blocks from the police station last night.

Soon afterward the office of a coal company six blocks from the station was held up and robbed of $125 by three Negroes who bound two employes. Numerous other robberies occurred during the night.

Meanwhile, merchants have proposed a curfew law for grocery stores. Originators of the movement seek police authority for forcing the stores in outlying districts to close early in the evening.

Thus far, the concentrated police campaign has brought about the arrest of eight Negroes. Three were suspected of the coal company robbery last night and the others were questioned about holdups over a period of several weeks. Police said the three finally admitted the coal company robbery.

Musical Treat Is Arranged For Naval Hospital Patients

Thanksgiving Concert to Be Given by Shoreham Riviera Players.

Thanksgiving Day—a day of cheer and family reunion—will be just another day to the hundreds of war veterans who will be forced to remain within the confines of the Naval Hospital, unable to gather at their family hearth, to attend the epic football contests or enjoy other pleasures that will be the lot of the physically fit.

Yet some measure of cheer has been promised to these men and every possible step to make their Thanksgiving full of pleasure will be taken.

A large item on the program at the hospital will be a concert on Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Maxim Lowe's Hotel Shoreham Riveira Orchestra have volunteered their talents for this occasion.

They will play in the recreation hall and present a program lasting an hour. The music will be piped to the bedsides of those veterans who will be unable to leave their wards and rooms. Mr. Lowe suggested and arranged the concert.

WOMAN'S KIDNAPING STORY PROVED HOAX

Special to The Washington Post.

Winchester, Va., Nov. 19.—The story of a 21-year-old woman that she was kidnaped from the streets of Jackson, Miss., carried 1,200 miles to a point 12 miles west of Winchester, there criminally attacked by her abductors and released was proved a hoax here late today after Frederick County officers disproved her allegations when facts were uncovered by the Mississippi police.

Eula Woofter, 21, who said she was from Jackson, was responsible for the imaginary tale which sent police squads in several States hunting for the alleged kidnapers. From out of a cold rain she applied at the filling station near Gore, west of here, early today and asked that officers be called, saying she had been kidnaped. Sheriff Luther Pannett hastened to the place and brought the girl to a local hospital.

The woman stated that she had been forcibly put in a car by two men in Jackson, Miss., Thursday and brought here where she was released after being attacked. She declared they motored in a coupe bearing Mississippi license 1107. Robert Woofter, a railroad ticket agent at Jackson, was her father, the girl claimed.

Local authorities communicated with Jackson authorities but the latter said no such person lived there and that Jackson had no such street address as the woman gave. They said license plate No. 1107 was in the possession of a Natchez minister to whom it was issued.

Sheriff Pannett requestioned her whereupon she admitted the story was false. She said she made the trip voluntarily with the two men and that her father lived at Picketts, W. Va. A call to Mr. Woofter verified the fact and he ordered her held until he could come for her. She refused to give a reason for the kidnaping story.

Local officers ordered the search for the two men with her continued, intimating they would probably be turned over to Federal authorities. The girl declared she did not know their names.

Monte Game Charged To Man Taken at Track

Percy Robertson, who said he came from "down in North Carolina," was arrested yesterday at the Bowie race track on a charge of operating a three-card monte game and resisting an officer.

Sheriff W. C. Hopkins, who arrested Robertson, said the man made a motion toward a knife hidden in his pocket when he was taken into custody.

1932 FARM INCOMES HALF OF 1929 TOTAL

(Associated Press.)

The American farmers' gross income for this year is tentatively estimated by the Agriculture Department at $5,240,000,000—less than half of the 1929 returns. Farm production in 1931 brought $6,955,000,000; $9,403,000,000 in 1930, and $11,950,000,000 in 1929.

Estimates of expenditures and net incomes for this year have not been made, but the department says that "expenditures have probably been further reduced since farmers have sharply curtailed expenditures, especially for fertilizer, machinery, and repairs for farm buildings and machinery. However, it appears unlikely that these reductions have amounted to as much as the reduction in gross income."

The reduction in gross returns since 1929 is ascribed "largely to national and world-wide changes in financial and economic conditions which have brought about lower price levels in general, and have curtailed demand for farm products in both domestic and foreign markets."

The live stock industry suffered the worst, its 1932 income amounting to $2,958,000,000 as compared with $4,191,000,000 last year, the department found. Among the crops, cotton and cottonseed were the heavy sufferers with gross income figured at $397,000,000 against $529,000,000 in 1931. Income for grains was placed at $391,000,000 against $465,000,000 a year ago.

CATALONIA NAMES FIRST PARLIAMENT IN ELECTION TODAY

Numerous Disorders Have Marked Campaign, and Strike Threatened.

CAMBO FACTION OFFERS MACIA GREATEST FIGHT

87 Seats Will Be Filled; Women Will Not Vote; Labor Surprise Due.

Barcelona, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—After a long and bitter campaign in which rival parties put on a red-hot battle to enjoy the first fruits of power, Catalonia will go to the polls tomorrow to elect its first Parliament since it was made an autonomous state by Spain.

Numerous disorders marked the campaign, and in the closing days threats of a textile strike, as a political move, hung over Catalonia. It was rumored at first that all open-air spectacles would be suspended to allay election fervor, but it was finally decided to call off only a football game because the rival club partisans had threatened disorders.

Called by Macia.

The election was called by Francisco Macia, who became President of the Catalonian generality, or government, in the landslide of Republican fervor which unseated the Spanish monarchy April 14, 1931. The big guns of Catalonian politics, still smoking from the fight to win Catalonian autonomy from the new National Republican Congress, wheeled to face the fight for 87 parliamentary seats to be filled in the elections under terms laid down in the statutes.

This means a deputy for every 40,000 electors throughout the region. This embraces the four Catalonian provinces. The statute prorates the number of seats upon regional population. Thus Barcelona City will elect 25 deputies, Barcelona province 20. The other three regions deriving their names from their capitals are Gerona, Lerida and Tarragona, and will seat fourteen deputies each.

President Macia himself heads the Esquerra Catalan, or the left Catalonian party, which was able to carry the municipal elections of April, 1931, overwhelmingly, and in the later elections for a national Congress send a powerful bloc to that Congress.

Directed by Cambo.

The Liiga Regionalista, directed by Francisco Cambo, is offering greatest opposition to Macia's Esquerra. Voiceless, or nearly so, since a recent throat operation during an extended stay in Paris, Cambo has announced that he will seek no post himself. But he is directing the policies of the party which frankly leans toward the right. This party is largely supported by Catalonian industry, commerce and finance.

Labor itself may furnish the most sensational note of the elections, according to regional politicians and newspapers. A "red front" has been urged by syndicalist and Communist Labor elements.

Women will not vote in the elections because the new electoral census admitting women is incomplete.

The preliminary contests will be held at East Washington Community Center and at Roosevelt Community Center, both of which have excellent stage and lighting equipment for the presentation of the plays.

Around the Town

WITH THE STROLLER

A BIRD'S-EYE view of Florida avenue, if the bird was high enough, would resemble a warped pretzel. No street in Washington meanders about the place like this one. At different times in its uncontrolled run through the city, it points to the north, south, east, west, northeast and southwest. To remain on its corkscrew back one must be able to box a compass, and probably unbox one.

Two great American institutions stand at its start and finish—a church and a gas station. It finds its northwest source near Twenty-second and Massachusetts and broadens into a wide curve to the right until it reaches Connecticut, where it begins to run due east and west...past the "sight" of the proposed Masonic Temple, barren these many years... the Cordova looks like a Spanish mission...across U street at a crazy angle and around a right-handed bend...nearing Sixteenth street it runs past a group of towering gloomy old homes, as still as death, until it reaches Sixteenth street and Henderson Castle, no longer interesting since the death of the old gentlewoman and her Queen Mary hats.

Wonder if the Roosevelt Hotel will raise its rates?...and if Roosevelt will give himself a raise back to the old presidential salary...another sharp turn to the left and across busy Fourteenth street and into the colored belt...baleful eating jernts...young bloods with padded shoulders...the most dangerous corner in Washington, Thirteenth and Florida...aloof Central High and Garfield...a right angle turn...grocery stores that advertise in big white lettering painted on the littered windows...the rolling gait of old Negroes...all of a sudden you lose Florida, at U street and Ninth.

There it is across the street...It has gobbled up U street, but as we turn sharply to the left and follow it, Washington's Harlem begins to thin out...garish two-minute photography holes...all out for the ball park ...a row of underbidding undertakers...icing-coated pies, and pigs' feet ...a hefty colored woman in the favorite pose of her mammy and grandmammy—leaning out of a second story window—but she has a pair of ear phones on...angelic piccaninnies... across North Capitol and into the warehouse district...the pant of the railroad...a junk shop with a row of water-closets on display—rows and rows of leprous sycamores...busy markets where once was Camp Meigs and the beginning of the old Patterson tract, where stood the remnants of a fine old house and where the old K street bunch once exhumed a body and stole its ruby ring...silent Gallaudet...and so on out to lose itself down the oil slot of a gas station at Fifteenth and H.

My ample-bellied friend, who once was adept with the ivory ruler, tells me that the five-cent schooner of beer has gone forever. Taxes and the increased cost of production will prove the undoing of 5-cent beer once the lawmakers roll the Constitution off the water wagon.

"Wash Monday" is a term which most people class as extinct as the Dodo, but the Weather Bureau reports that women still call to ask for Monday predictions.

WASHINGTON has two preeminent smells, and a native stranded in any foreign clime must be filled with a nostalgia for the city when similar odors greet his nostrils.

1. The permeating wave from the bean-soup kettles in the Capitol corridors just before lunch time.

2. The ineffable, but unmistakable, effluvium of the District street car as it grinds to a halt between loading platforms.

Two little businesses, never seen before the depression finally hit Washington, are thriving — the flower business on Connecticut avenue and the simonizing boys all over town, especially near The Post. Some enterprising soul has syndicated most of the flower sellers, but the simonize boys are militantly independent. They undersell the garages by about $5 on an auto shining job.

LO! the poor lamplighter.

Remember when you usetd to look forward to the time near dark every evening when the friendly visitor usually accompanied by a raft or his proud progeny hippy-de-hopped into your street with his broomstick and lighted the gas lamps by means of the bent nail on the stick's end? Today there are only five or ten of the old boys left, where once the gas light company hired more than 200.

There are 1,900 gas street lamps left in Washington, most of them in the alleys. In 1925 there were 12,000, but the relentless march of electricity, with its handsome streamline lamps, is sweeping into limbo a public utility which 50 years ago caused people to stand around in cluster to gaze at as one of the wonders of the world.

What comparatively few gas lamps are left are now almost exclusively operated by clocks, which turn on the lights at a set hour, and turn them off in the morning. Lamplighters have turned clock winders.

The history of street-lighting in Washington matches strides with the march of local history itself. The first street lighting was tried on Pennsylvania avenue in 1817, and the fuel was oil. The cost seemed very prohibitive to a government trying to rebuild itself after the British had burned the Capitol, and so they were discontinued—and the poles used as horse posts—for a year. They made a comeback in 1819 and for a ten-year stretch Washington had a lighted street at night (except on moonlight nights when lamplighters extinguished the oil wicks in the interests of economy).

However, from 1831 to 1842 they went out again, and there was not a street in town lighted at night. Ten years later the Pennsylania avenue oil lamps were supplanted with gas lights, and Congress ordered both sides of the Avenue, from the Capitol to the White House to be illuminated. Lighting was by open gas flame.

The first electric lights were placed on F street, between Ninth and Fourteenth in 1885, and they emitted a garish purple sputtering glow that the good burghers immediately decided was no good. Gas made a great comeback in 1906, when the Welsbach mantle was perfected, and continued until 1925, when it staged its own little stock market crash.

Philadelphia remains the last stronghold of the gas lamp.

Vare must be a reason somewhere.

U. S. Relief Funds Given Three States

Tennessee, Michigan and Utah Get Finance Corporation Loans.

(Associated Press.)

Relief funds yesterday were voted by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to three States, Tennessee getting $321,500; Utah, $23,539, and Michigan, $66,000.

The Utah loan is to be used in Summit and Wasatch Counties from November 1 to December 31. The Michigan loan is to be used in two undesignated counties and four townships from November 1 to December 31. The Tennessee loan is to be used in 36 undesignated counties.

Available local resources were said to be inadequate to meet the need during the last two months of the year. The corporation already has loaned Utah $640,000.

Yesterday's loans bring the total advanced to 35 States and two territories to $70,969,175.

Higher Exchange, New Zealand Aim

Increase in Rate Between Nation and England Is Being Sought.

Wellington, New Zealand, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Agitation is being carried on here to raise the exchange rate between New Zealand and the United Kingdom to 25 per cent above par. At present the exchange in London against New Zealand currency is around 12 per cent.

Prime Minister Forbes asserted that the banks have accepted responsibility for the country's finances, and therefore must take the action. Bankers are reluctant to assume responsibility for the move. It is pointed out that New Zealand exporters would benefit and that if imports from the United Kingdom fell off a surplus might pile up in the exchange pool maintained in London by New Zealand banks since the beginning of the year.

The Associated Chambers of Commerce are opposed to the plan, criticizing it as a breach of the agreements signed by New Zealand at the imperial economic conference. The chamber's viewpoint is that an artificial rise in the exchange rate would be tantamount to increasing duties on British goods.

Sousa's Musical Library Is Memorial at Illinois U.

Cataloguing of Nine Tons of Compositions Advances to Point Where 3,000 Have Been Listed; Other Mementos in Collection.

Urbana, Ill., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The vast library of music made famous by John Philip Sousa will perpetuate the late bandmaster's memory at the University of Illinois.

Nine tons of musical compositions—enough to fill 42 large trunks—comprise the Sousa library which has been bequeathed to the Illini bands.

There is enough music in the collection to last the average college band more than ten years—without repeating a single piece. Already 3,000 compositions have been catalogued, and many more remain to be indexed. The three Illinois bands normally play about 300 compositions each year.

Not only will the University Library house the Sousa collection of music, but it also will contain a memorial room in his honor.

Although the intention is to keep this music intact for Illinois bands of the future, occasional use may be made of it by former Sousa bandsmen.

In addition to the compositions, the library includes several mementoes. One is Sousa's director's stand—once a platform almost 2 feet high, but now standing only 5 inches above the floor. As Sousa advanced in years, the stand was cut down so he was spared the exertion of stepping to its original height.

Another is a shortened broom which Sousa always kept handy to brush off the carpet covering his director's stand. He insisted that the carpet be kept immaculately clean.

The name of Sousa is distinctive on the University of Illinois band roll, for he was its only honorary conductor. Prof. A. Austin Harding for years has been its active director.

Sousa and Prof. Harding were intimate friends for many years and it was this friendship, university officials said, that resulted in the University of Illinois being bequeathed the library.

INCREASED WORLD DEMAND NEEDED BY AMERICA'S COTTON

U. S. Experts Blame New Competition by Foreign Producers.

BOTH INDIA AND CHINA TO HAVE BIGGER CROPS

Domestic Supply Found to Be 6,000,000 Bales Above 10-Year Average.

Atlanta, Nov. 19.—Because of the prospective increase in competition from foreign cottons, any material further increase in consumption of American cotton will require an improvement in world demand conditions.

Such was the conclusion of extension specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, expressed in an exhaustive report issued following a Southern outlook conference held here.

"As present indications point to much larger crops in 1932-33 in both India and China, and prices of these growths have declined in comparison with American cotton," the report forecast, "there will be a tendency for some foreign mills, particularly in the Orient, to turn more to these cottons this year.

"Further increases in world consumption of American cotton in 1932-33 will therefore require an increase in total world demand."

The world supply of American cotton for 1932-33 was placed at 24,400,000 bales, based on the October estimate of 11,400,000 bales for this year, plus the August 1 carry-over of 13,000,000 bales.

This supply is 6,000,000 bales greater than the ten-year average of 18,400,000 bales for the period of 1921-30, during which time the average yearly consumption was 13,400,000 bales.

At the present acreage and average yields and the present rate of consumption, the experts figured the carry-over would be reduced over 700,000 bales per year. This year's crop was 900,000 bales less than the consumption of 1931-32, but the per acre yield was somewhat less than the ten-year average, due to boll weevil and other conditions.

The report said the supply might be reduced to normal within four years if consumption should return to the 1921-30 ten-year average of 13,400,000 bales, and if production should remain at this year's level.

Prospective Price Level.

It would be possible, the report added, for the surplus to disappear in a year and a half if consumption should shoot up to the high level of 1926 to 1929, when 15,400,000 bales were used annually.

"In drawing conclusions about the future supply and consumption relationship," said the report, "it is necessary to consider the prospective level of cotton prices, the time required for recovery in world demand, probable changes in acreage and yields in this country, and the prospective trend in foreign production."

It was pointed out that foreign production increased while consumption of American cotton was increasing under stimulus of improving world economic conditions, and that this moderated the influence of the world economic improvement of that period on the demand for American cotton.

Foreign production for the current season, it was explained, will be greater than that of last year, but probably not as large as in 1930-31 or 1928-29. Foreign crops last season were reduced nearly 1,500,000 bales—1,000,000 in India, 450,000 in China and 400,000 in Egypt.

Foreign Crop Increases.

These decreases, however, were partially offset by the increases in Russia of 300,000 bales and in Anglo-Egyptian Sudan of 100,000 bales.

Cotton acreage, the report said, has declined in the major cotton producing countries except Russia and China, and for most of the smaller countries expansion has been checked temporarily at least. Expansion may continue in Russia, but, said the government specialists, it does not appear that Russia will become a regular exporter of importance, as increasing amounts of cotton will be needed for home consumption.

World consumption of all growths last year remained practically unchanged from the low level of 1930-31. World consumption of American cotton increased 11,400,000 bales in 1931-32, but except for 1930-31 the consumption, amounting to 12,300,000 bales, was the lowest since 1923-24, according to reports of the International Federation of Cotton Spinners.

Increase in consumption of American cotton last year was made at the expense of foreign-grown cottons, the specialists' report declared. Consumption of Egyptian cotton increased 150,000 bales, but consumption of Indian cotton decreased nearly 900,000 bales and sundries fell off 600,000 bales.

Armadillo New Answer To Texas Food Problem

Llano, Tex., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—If the armadillo crop holds out, the problem of food this winter should be partially solved for people hereabouts.

Reports received here are that a thrifty farmer recently killed eight armadillos, from which he made 40 pounds of sausage. Armadillo meat has been described as "good eating;" more appetizing, in fact, than Vice President-elect John N. Garner's "parboiled squirrel and old, tough blue quail."

EXILE OF LEADERS ENDS BRAZIL'S WAR

President Vargas Promises to Hold Elections on May 3.

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Exile of political and military leaders of the Sao Paulo revolution to Portugal and other European countries and the cessation of the intermittent rioting in Sao Paulo City has clarified the political situation in Brazil and brought talk of possible presidential candidates remaining in the country.

The return to constitutional government in elections set for May 3 have been promised by Provisional President Getulio Vargas. In previous years the constitution gave Sao Paulo and other southern states practical control and the summer revolution was aimed at forcing immediate return to that regime.

A government commission is drafting proposals for a new constitutional project to control the forthcoming election and, in some quarters, it is understood the southern states will be stripped of their former great powers.

Leaders in Exile.

With their political leaders in exile, perhaps forever, attention turned to new names of possible presidential candidates. The first suggested was that of Jose America de Almeida, minister of the interior, presented by the Newspaper Jornal de Recife of Pernambuco.

Senhor Almeida, who is powerful in northern Brazil, organized the 1930 revolution, which put Vargas in power in the state of Parahyba.

Measures have been taken to make defeat more bearable in Sao Paulo. The deportations stopped clamor for severe punishment of leaders and the pro and anti government forces have turned their attention to the constitutional project.

Volunteers Disbanded.

Exile of the Paulista chieftains, including several journalists, caused only a mild repercussion in Sao Paulo, where transportation of disbanded volunteer battalions to their homes, and pacifying measures by an organization of former combatants helped prevent further disorders.

The new federation of Sao Paulo volunteers, in denouncing the recent riots and urging "pacification of spirits," flayed the old political parties and declared it would accept no compromises with partisan political groups.

Redemption of the rebel money is under way in Sao Paulo, and Gen. Waldomiro Lima, military governor, has reiterated he had no intention to meddle in politics and his sole object was to normalize the state.

Normalcy Returning.

Industrial activity has gradually quickened, Sao Paulo has resumed its exports to the remainder of Brazil, and the resumption of coffee shipments after some delay has helped ease the situation in Santos and elsewhere.

As a precautionary measure, Sao Paulo police kept a ban on street meetings and for the first time in Brazil a military court has been called to try crimes committed under war conditions. The supreme military tribunal has been hearing cases of crimes in the civil war zone. It is not, however, judging military men implicated in the revolution.

Fidac Will Pay Tribute To War Dead Nov. 28

Next Monday, November 28, veterans of the World War will pay tribute to the thousands of our comrades who gave their lives for a great cause 14 years ago.

The Fidac has selected this date for its usual pilgrimage to the shrines of the unknown soldiers throughout the world. Noon of November 28, Charles Hann, jr., of New York, vice president of the Fidac for the United States, will place a wreath on the Tomb of our Unknown Soldier in Arlington. At the same hour similar ceremonies will be taking place in nine European countries.

Siamese Throne Safe In New Constitution

Bangkok, Siam, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A new constitution from Siam which had the approval of King Prajadhipok was made public today, removing the possibility that the monarch might abdicate the throne. The constitution provides for the appointment of an executive committee by the ruler and permits him to dissolve the legislature. Members of the royal family will be permitted to hold any appointive office, but can not enter active politics or run for elective office.

After a revolution a few months ago King Prajadhipok granted constitutional government and promulgated a constitution.

KREUGER DIRECTORS ORDERED TO COURT

Must Appear Next April to Show Why They Should Not Pay Debt.

Stockholm, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Legal action has now been instituted against the directors of Kreuger & Toll by the administrators in bankruptcy. The directors have been ordered to appear in court April 25, 1933, to show cause why they should not, jointly and severally, make restitution to creditors and shareholders to the full extent of their ability.

The directors against whom this recourse has been asked include Donald Durant, of New York; F. O. Bugge, of Paris; Erik Sjostrom, Sven Lubeck, Ernst Kreuger, Paul Toll, C. Juhlin Dannfelt, Axel Lindberg, C. V. Andred and Oscar Rydbeck, of Sweden.

Criminal action in the Kreuger & Toll case continues, with Torsten Kreuger, brother of Ivar, one of the latest to be arrested. Police reports have indicated that Torsten Kreuger had wide-flung business interests.

One of the auditors of Kreuger & Toll, Anton Wendler, recently was sentenced to one and one-half years imprisonment.

A recent formal report by the liquidators in bankruptcy while pointing out that Kreuger worked in a manner and under conditions which might have made it difficult for the board to control his actions, declares that even an "unprejudiced consideration of circumstances and facts seem to us an obvious indication that the board (like its auditors and certain of its officials) have neglected even the most elementary duties in which they must be considered to have accepted with their office."

AMERICAN INTEREST LARGE IN HONDURAS

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Nov. 19 (A. P.).—Loyal troops operating under Gen. Manuel Trejo have recaptured the city of Santa Barbara from the rebels, it was officially reported today.

The city was taken yesterday afternoon without any fighting, the government reported, and the rebels, consisting of liberals defeated in the recent presidential election, retreated toward Gracuas.

(Associated Press.)

The United States has a substantial business stake in banana-rich Honduras, where the Liberal party, defeated in the presidential election a few weeks ago, has raised the red banner of armed revolt.

Extent of Investments.

American investments in the rich tropical country, chiefly banana growing and mining enterprises, are estimated by Government trade observers to amount to approximately $72,000,000.

Its northern ports closer to New Orleans than is Chicago, Honduras supplies the United States with about 80 per cent of the bananas we consume every year. Exports to this country in the first eight months of this year were valued at $6,311,000. More than half of this amount is represented by the banana trade.

While President Colindres reports the revolt has been put down, Latin-American observers here will be watchful for sporadic disturbances until President-elect Andino, member of the same conservative party as Colindres, is inaugurated in February.

1,192 American Residents.

An official census taken last August showed there were 1,192 citizens of the United States in Honduras. Eighteen months ago, when an uprising menaced the safety of American nationals there, American warships were dispatched to the waters off the northern coast.

Among the American concerns with large business enterprises in Honduras, besides the large fruit companies, is the New York-Honduras Rosario Mining Co. The famous Rosario Mine at San Juancito has been in continuous operation for nearly 50 years, and has produced more than $41,000,000 worth of gold and silver.

San Pedro Sula, scene of the fiercest fighting in the current uprising, is an up-to-date city with 24,000 inhabitants and a large business turnover. Located in a region of banana and sugar cane plantations, it is frequently visited by American salesmen covering northern Honduras. American money is used almost exclusively in the city.

Dr. Robbins Deplores Dull Portions of Many Hymns

"Lead, Kindly Light" and "Hark, Hark, My Soul," Cited as Examples of Religious Compositions Which Have Stood Test of Ages.

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Reports and addresses presented to the Hymn Society, which closed the celebration of its tenth annual anniversary this week, declared that there is too much of the trivial, dull and sentimental among the hymns used by the Protestant churches of America. The society is composed of hymn writers, hymn tune composers and hymn book editors.

"Our task is plain: By slow processes of education to uplift the standards of a nation's worship, and to war with the sword of the spirit against all the dullness, levity, triviality and inconsequence which now degrades it," asserted Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins, New York, chairman of the society's commission on "the function of the hymn in modern worship."

He called on the churches and the radio ministers "to restore the great hymns of all time to their proper place in modern worship, and to add new hymns, equal in merit, to those which have stood the test of time."

While the speakers and the commissions attacked "weak hymns," they gave few examples of them, preferring to list what they considered strong, fitting, dignified ones.

"To criticize a hymn, or even a tune, which perchance may have brought comfort at some crisis in life seems, to say the least, ungracious," declared Prof. Walter Henry Hall, professor emeritus of choral and church music at Columbia University.

As "approved" hymns he mentioned: "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," "All Praise to Thee, My God, This Night," "Holy, Holy, Holy," "The Church's One Foundation," "Crown Him With Many Crowns," "Lead Kindly Light" and "Hark, Hark, My Soul."

Dr. Robbins mentioned approvingly: "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," "Love Divine, All Love Excelling," "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind," "O For a Closer Walk With God" and "Lord of All Being, Throned Afar."

$300,000,000 DEBTS TO U. S. ONE BAR TO SOVIET RECOGNITION

State Department Tells of Loans Made to Keep Russia in War.

ADVANCES FOLLOWED OVERTHROW OF CZAR

Reds Repudiated All Foreign Obligations After Ousting Kerensky Regime.

(Associated Press.)

How the United States advanced hundreds of millions of dollars in trying to bolster Kerensky's government and keep Russia in the World War was told yesterday in official dispatches published by the State Department.

More than $300,000,000 still stands on the books of the United States Treasury as a charge against a Russian government which no longer exists—a charge which may figure prominently in any negotiations which might be conducted looking to recognition of Soviet Russia.

The documents published by the State Department supplement two previous volumes on relations with Russia and cover most of the years 1917 and 1918.

They throw additional light on the credits given to the provisional government of Kerensky, review efforts to stabilize Russian currency, discuss plans to continued trade after Kerensky was overthrown by the Soviet regime and explain efforts of American railway engineers to rehabilitate Russian railroads.

Secretary of State Lansing cabled Ambassador David R. Francis April 3, 1917, asking him to learn what financial aid the Russian provisional government desired from the United States. Three days later Francis replied that Russia needed $500,000,000, adding:

"Russia owns boundless forests, immeasurable deposits of ores and oils and immense areas of tillable lands. This loan, in my judgment, would be absolutely safe. Furthermore, it is advisable from every viewpoint of policy."

Feared British Control.

Subsequent dispatches indicated Russian officials were eager that Great Britain should have no control over any credits the United States advanced to Russia. It also was demonstrated very soon that the United States had no enthusiasm about lending $500,000,000, but gave Russia a credit of $100,000,000 on May 17, to be used chiefly for the purchase of locomotives and railway cars in this country.

On July 8, 1917, Elihu Root, chief of the mission sent to Russia to devise plans for keeping that country in the war, joined with Ambassador Francis in recommending a loan of $75,000,000 to pay Russian soldiers in Finland and disgruntled sailors in the Finnish waters. This loan was represented as necessary for national security and was immediately granted.

Francis advised on July 22 that $50,000,000 more be advanced and described Kerensky's attitude as "determined and aggressive," saying:

Rifle Contracts in U. S.

State Department dispatches to Francis indicated that Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury was not inclined to meet Russian demands unsparingly, and a note from Lord Reading, the British Ambassador in Washington, on August 3, stated that Russia was asking for supplies far in excess of what her transportation system could handle.

However, another credit for $100,000,000 was granted by McAdoo, August 23 to cover rifle contracts and other orders placed in New York.

On November 3 Francis made another appeal for $100,000,000, saying it was necessary to bolster sentiment. He said:

Foreign Loans Repudiated.

"If the Soviet should control its government would not survive long but would be succeeded by a stronger government which would be more potential in restoring order and prosecuting war."

Then came the Bolshevist victory.

Col. E. N. House wired Secretary Lansing from Paris November 24:

"In Great Britain and France the Russian situation is considered as hopeless at the moment. There is no responsible government within sight. I should advise making no more advances at present or permitting any further contracts for purchases."

Messages later received by the State Department announced decrees by the Soviet government repudiating foreign loans and taking over all property by the Bolshevist government.

Hawaiian Delegate Sails To Fight for Self Rule

Honolulu, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Delegate Victor S. K. Houston sailed today to open a fight in Congress at Washington for continuation of self rule in Hawaii. He will be joined next month by a commission of territorial leaders soon to be appointed by Gov. Lawrence M. Judd to aid him.

Frankly perturbed over a bill introduced by Guinn Williams, chairman of the House territories committee, placing Hawaii under commission rule, Houston said his most important task during the short session will be opposition to proposed changes in the territorial government.

If You Sell Merchandise that Is BETTER than the CHEAPEST You Can't Profitably Advertise to Everybody . . . . . .

Everybody reads some newspaper, but not all newspaper readers are logical purchasers of automobiles, oil burners, mechanical refrigerators, fur coats or the finer grades of necessary commodities.

As the New York Sun so truthfully states: "The depression has been responsible for a number of funny theories in advertising. One of the funniest theories is that because men who had money in 1929 have less money now, it must be true that those who had no money in 1929 now have a lot . . . Expressed in advertising practice, the followers of this theory apparently believe that commodities that had their biggest market among the substantial, intelligent people a few years ago should now be advertised to those who never did have much money and now have less.

"The result has been that in some instances the advertising of products of good quality is being stepped down . . . is being placed before readers who have never been financially able to buy the products advertised . . . and are less able to buy them now.

"If the rich and the well-to-do are poorer because of the depression, certainly the poor are also poorer. If the poor couldn't buy the advertiser's merchandise in 1929, they certainly can't buy it now, EVEN THOUGH THE PRICE HAS BEEN CUT. If the people of means were the advertiser's best customers in 1929, they are still his best customers, even though their incomes have been reduced."

Eighty per cent of the families now applying for emergency relief are people who even in the past years of prosperity were in the lower classes of occupations at the lowest wages . . . What is their customary choice of a newspaper? (Surveys of Washington Newspaper readers, made by Dr. Daniel Starch for the American Association of Advertising Agencies, give definite information on this subject and are available at the advertising offices of The Washington Post.)

Again quoting the New York Sun: "A man who couldn't afford an automobile in 1929 isn't likely to buy one now, even if the price of the car has been materially lowered. Recent surveys show that even among the low-price cars, 72 per cent of the sales in 1932 was among the mental workers (executives, professional people, heads of businesses, salesmen, clerical workers) 28 per cent was among manual workers."

70,000 See Middies Repulse All But Two Threats.

First Score Follows Long Heave, Lukats to Murphy.

By JAMES L. RENICK.

MUNICIPAL STADIUM, Cleveland, November 19 (A.P.).—Notre Dame had what touchdowns there were today but Navy had the fight and so the Ramblers could level the Middies only by a 12-to-0 score.

The Notre Dame eleven showed signs of its great power but usually it found a stalwart Middy line that asked no quarter and gave none.

There might have been better football games played today but it is doubtful if anywhere as much enthusiasm was displayed as at this lakefront stadium. Seventy thousand persons braved a bitter wind and threat of snow to make up the Midwest's largest football audience this year.

Twice in the second quarter the green-shirted raiders from South Bend smashed over the Navy goal line but after that a stubborn Middy defense halted their fast running backs and played the powerful Rambler line on even terms when its goal line was threatened.

The Middies thereby surprised those who had expected Notre Dame to smother them under an avalanche of touchdowns.

Navy Holds Slight Edge On Defense.

Even at that, the Ramblers' 12 points was no criterion of the difference in the teams' offensive punch. Whatever edge the Navy had was in stubborn defensive strength. Notre Dame piled up 24 first downs and 310 yards while Navy was making only 92 yards and 4 first downs, 2 of those by the penalty route.

On two occasions in the fourth quarter the Middies displayed a defense seldom shown against a Notre Dame eleven. Once the first string Rambler back field had taken the ball to the 5-yard line but Navy stubbornness asserted itself and the Ramblers were stopped on the 1-foot line.

Shortly after that Notre Dame again worked the ball to the 5-yard line with goal to go on four plays. And once again the Navy did the seemingly impossible and held the Ramblers for downs.

It was a combination of varsity and second-string Notre Dame players who supplied the 12-point scoring punch. Once this combination was broken up and the regular first team inserted, Notre Dame could make plenty of yards, but failed when the going was hardest.

Both Notre Dame touchdowns could be traced directly to the aerial attack. Failing to count in the first quarter on straight football, Lukats hurled a long pass to Murphy shortly after the second period opened and he wiggled through to the 10-yard line. On the next play, Joe Sheeketski cut back through center and crossed the goal line. Murphy's attempt for the extra point from placement scarcely left the ground.

Sheeketski Goes Over Standing Up.

The period was only a few minutes older when Lukats' punt escaped Erck, Navy safety man, and rolled to the 4-yard line. After the punt, Leonard and Sheeketski combined to carry the oval to the 9-yard line, from where Lukats passed to Sheeketski in the last 15 seconds of first-half play and Sheeteski went over standing up. Lukats' kick for the extra point was wide.

Navy's only sign of offense occurred shortly after the second half started. With the aid of a 15-yard penalty and a Chung-Hoon-to-Slack pass, the Middies took the ball from their own 20 to Notre Dame's 45-yard line, but here Melinkovich intercepted a pass and the Tars were stopped.

At the close of the third period, Koken, Melinkovich and Branchesu took the ball to Navy's 17, but as the final period started Borries intercepted a pass on his 10-yard line. Here Navy threw caution to the four winds and opened up with passes. One was intercepted by Robinson on Navy's 27 and a few minutes later Navy was making the first of its brilliant goal line stands.

Two Ohio lads, Joe Sheeketski and Mike Koken, carried away major honors. Koken made 62 yards in 15 attempts while Sheeketski made 47 in 10 tries.

Capt. James Reedy, of the Navy, a Cleveland boy, directed the Navy's brilliant goal line stands and was instrumental in turning back the Rambler thrusts when a few inches might have meant more points.

AUBURN 14-7 VICTOR OVER GEORGIA

Nears Dixie Title by Last-Half Comeback After Trailing.

COLUMBUS, Ga., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—After its scoring gestures had been thwarted for two periods, Auburn opened a furious offensive in the last half here today to overcome an early lead and defeat Georgia, 14 to 7, for the first time in a decade.

The victory was Auburn's ninth of the year and its sixth Southern Conference triumph, advancing the Plainsmen to within a single game of conference championship.

Georgia, a thoroughly cuffed eleven this fall, arose in its new-found might today to take an early lead and seriously threaten Auburn's aspirations. Its young, but heavy line played Auburn's more experienced forwards to a standstill and except for a sudden dash by Phipps in the last period the Bulldogs might have carved at least a draw out of the duel.

More than 15,000 persons sat shivering in Memorial Stadium, which was dedicated with this contest.

Auburn's famed aerial attack was a dangerous weapon throughout, but, except for a few surprise tosses in the opening quarter, Georgia's defense covered well.

Jimmy Hitchcock Marked Man.

Jimmy Hitchcock, Auburn's captain, played the full 60 minutes, but he was a marked man and, although he made several short sprints, Georgia kept him closely shackled. It was Buster Mott, the hero of this game a year ago, who outdazzled Hitchcock. His defensive play was marvelous and he slipped loose for three or four long and dangerous dashes.

Georgia scored first late in the second period, following a campaign of 76 yards which was featured by a 33-yard run by Mott and culminated as Joe Crouch, substitute for Gilmore, bombed through the line.

Twice Georgia drove into Auburn ground in the third quarter, but each time the Plainsmen held, recovering a Bulldog fumble on their 38-yard line to end the second. From here Auburn inaugurated its march to the tying touchdown. With Hitchcock, Dupree and Phipps alternating, the Plainsmen pounded to Georgia's 14-yard line and Hitchcock scored on a spin play around Georgia's right end. Ariail place kicked the extra point.

Races 45 Yards For Score.

On the first play of the fourth period, Phipps broke through center, was apparently stopped by a Georgia tackler, but shook loose and raced 45 yards for the winning tally.

Auburn made 12 first downs to 10 for Georgia.

Safety Nets Fordham 8-6 Victory Over Oregon State

NEW YORK, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A brawny, mud-soaked lineman heaved up through a drenching rain to block a kick and the splendid 8-year record of Oregon State against Eastern foes tumbled into the mud wallow of Fordham's playing field today by the scant margin of that play, a safety, 8 to 6.

For three full periods the husky Beavers from the Northwest, who came East in 1928 to smother one of New York University's greatest elevens, struggled through the worst weather conditions of the season—probably many seasons—to hold the mighty ram of Fordham even, each with a touchdown.

Playing conditions were almost impossible. A driving rain beat down on the 22 youngsters slogging through miniature lakes and mud that came to their ankles, fighting a soggy, mud-clogged ball, scarcely able to distinguish friend from foe.

First Oregon State, beaten only by the 1924 Nebraska team in eight years of intersectional conflict, got the break that led to the opening score.

Danowski Fumbles But Recovers.

Early in the first quarter, Ed Danowski, Fordham's crack punter, fumbled trying to kick a pig skin that must have felt like a medicine ball against a solid sheet of driving rain. He got the ball back, but not until it had rolled to his 2-yard line.

There he kicked again, a marvelous effort under the conditions, reaching out to his own 45-yard line. Immediately Oregon State launched its sole sustained drive of the day, with little Tommy Ward, a mite half back, slipping inside the tackles and around the ends, 5 and 6 yards at a clip, until he finally staggered 4 yards through the downpour, around his own end for the touchdown.

75-YARD RUN WINS, 7-0, FOR ARMY

By FOSTER HAILEY.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Army regulars, resting for the coming big games with Notre Dame and Navy, played just 5 minutes against West Virginia Wesleyan today, struck once and swiftly for a touchdown and then retired to watch the reserves hold safely for a 7-0 victory.

There was just one lull in a storm that had raged all night and continued through the game and in that period the Cadet "big" team sent Felix (Pick) Vidal scampering 75 yards for the only score, a brilliant dash that saw the little Army back dodge and twist his way through the entire Wesleyan Team.

Only a few hundred spectators, aside from the always loyal corps, huddled under raincoats and umbrellas in Michie Stadium to watch as queer a football game as possibly ever was played.

Rain Overhead and Mud Underfoot.

The gridiron was ankle deep in mud and the rain, sweeping the fields in gusts that almost blinded the players, made the ball as slippery as though it had been greased. There were at least 20 fumbles, none of them at very critical points, however, and the ball carrier frequently lost his footing before he had hardly started. The strange sight was presented through most of the first half of both teams kicking on first down waiting for the "break" that never came.

Lassiter Star In Defeat of Crimson

Harvard Threatens Only Once After Opening Period.

YALE BOWL, New Haven, Conn., Nov. 19 (U.P.).—A Yale Team that had been floundering all season found itself today in the bleak, wind-swept bowl and smashed out a sound 19-to-0 victory over Harvard, its football foe of 51 years' standing.

Less than 50,000 persons, the smallest crowd to see the annual battle between the sons of Old Eli and John Harvard for many a year, watched Yale unleash irresistible attacks in the first, third and fourth quarters and drive across for touchdowns.

The small crowd no doubt should be blamed on the natural dislike of Americans to expose themselves to death by drowning, pneumonia and frost bite. For three-quarters of the game the giant crater was swept by a blinding rain, which drove the customers deep into their slickers, furs and improvised shelters of oilcloth.

Field Resembles Duck Pond.

The field was a much better duck pond than a football gridiron. But Yale defied the elements and put on its finest exhibition of offensive and defensive football of the year. The Blue backs skimmed over the treacherous slush as though it were dry concrete and handled a slippery ball with the ease of a Thurston palming a half-dollar.

Yale made its first strike for victory early in the first period when Claire Curtin recovered a fumble by Jack Crickard on Harvard's 45-yard stripe. On first down, Bob Lassiter faded back to midfield and then rifled a pass 32 yards down the line and through the rain to Dug Parker, who caught it on the dead run as three Crimson tacklers hit him, high, low and medium. The next play saw gigantic Joe Crowley tear through the Harvard defense to the 3-yard line, where, on third down, Full Back Lev-

Nebraska Takes '32 Big Six Crown

Norman, Okla., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A fighting Nebraska Cornhusker team which last week held Pittsburgh to a scoreless tie clinched the 1932 Big Six Conference football championship today by defeating a stubborn Oklahoma University eleven, 5 to 0.

Oklahoma fought strenuously but vainly before a crowd of 12,000 for the one touchdown that might give it a cotitle with the Huskers. The title claim was clinched when Bernie Masterson, Nebraska quarter back, kicked a field goal from the Oklahoma 14-yard line early in the third quarter. The Huskers added two more points in the last five minutes of play with a safety.

The Sooners thus tied with Kansas for runner-up honor. Several times the Huskers were within touchdown scoring distance but were forced to punt when the Sooner line stiffened.

W. & L. Bows To Plunge of Poppelman

Old Liners Score in Second Period After Poor Punt.

LEXINGTON, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.). Maryland Old Liners marched over a muddy gridiron today for a second period touchdown and protected the slim lead to defeat Washington and Lee, 6 to 0, in the Generals' last home game of the season.

Sawyer's punt from behind his goal line that carried only 27 yards gave the Old Liners their scoring chance. A pass to Brenner was good for only 2 yards, but Widmyer made it a first down on the next play. Poppleman plunged through the Washington and Lee forwards for 11 yards in two tries. Widmyer picked up another yard and Poppleman crashed through the remaining 7 yards for the score.

Widmyer's attempted placement kick failed.

Both teams played cautiously, kicking often and waiting for a break that never came with the exception of the second period score.

Hilltoppers Score in Third Period After Recovering Punt.

By BOB CONSIDINE.

JOHNNY KUBACKI, a delicate-featured Bucknell football player, stepped mincingly out on the swampy field at Griffith Stadium yesterday. He was without helmet and his virgin uniform and wavy blond hair gave him the iridescent appearance of a grid god.

Way down at the end of the field 21 cakes of mud, who were football players an hour before, sat or lay in the swamp. One man lay flat on his back, half-submerged in water. He was Eddie Myers, Bucknell half back. A minute before he had plunged the joyous Georgetown stands into abysmal gloom by spearing a pass on the goal line and flopping into the end zone mud to tie the score 6-6.

Muddy Men Surround Kubacki.

Kubacki was having trouble getting out to the muddy men. He sidestepped the deeper pools, like a tap dancer. A buzz went around shivering stands. Kubacki's reputation was broadcast. He had never missed an extra-point kick for Bucknell. His machine-like leg had clicked innumerable footballs over the bar. He had never participated in any other part of the game, except kicking extra points.

Now the mud balls were picking themselves up from the tenuous turf. The teams lined up. Out on an end was a panting Georgetown player, recognized faintly as pudgy Ray Hudson. They were over the ball now. A Hoya lineman, overanxious, seemed to leap offside. Kubacki's eyes riveted on him, and he half turned to protest to an official. But the muddy ball was passed back to Red Peters. He held it to the cozy ground. Kubacki's gaze darted to the ball, but you could

CANRON, 9 TO 1, WINS IN BOWIE'S $5,000 AUTUMN HANDICAP

Filly Defeats Pompeius By Neck

12,000 See Brilliant Stretch Duel Won by Hanford.

Larranaga Third in Feature; Pilate in Easy Victory.

By WALTER HAIGHT.

A GAME combination of Canron, the horse, and Buddy Hanford, the jockey, accounted for the tenth running of the Prince Georges Autumn Handicap, a $5,000 added contest over the mile and a sixteenth course. A neck behind the winning filly came Pompeius, G. H. Bostwick's star, with no excuse except that he could not match the closing speed of Canron. Third, and three lengths away from the fighting pair, was Larranaga after a rough trip.

Some 12,000 witnessed the program at the nearby course yesterday and saw races run over a muddy track on a chilly and damp day. Both favorite players and moonshooters had their innings.

Pompeius and Canron Dominate.

With the exception of a brief period that ended soon after the field banked the clubhouse turn, there was little to the race except Pompeius and Canron, although those who bet on Larranaga were given a number of thrills as Kurtsinger endeavored to bring this colt from last position to a winning finish.

Microphone was first to show in front as Pompeius, without Pete Bostwick now, was second and Canron third. On the swing for the backstretch, Pompeius shook off Microphone to take the lead and Hanford held Canron where she was. Pardee and Larranaga made the moves on the back stretch, the former going to second and the latter to fourth.

Going to the stretch turn, Canron moved up to battle head and head with Pompeius and what a battle it turned out to be. Both Hanford and Jones were kicking with everything they had as the colt and filly ran through the sloppy stretch. Canron finally got a neck in front at the sixteenth pole and there was no change to the wire. In the meanwhile, Larranaga, which had been on the outside and the inside in an effort to get to the leaders, finally came up on the rail to take the third money from Curacao.

Welcome Gift Scores In Opener.

Welcome Gift, unlucky filly from the Greentree string, left the maiden ranks in the opening race—a 6-furlong sprint for 2-year-olds. Welcome Gift raced Lady Legend into defeat and went on to stall off the closing rush of Bright Shadow. The latter had bad luck in getting away and was forced to take the outside route. Johnny Gilbert on Xandra, a field horse, accounted for the third money.

Marooned, Eddie Steffen up, and Good Advice, with Buddy Hanford in the saddle, hooked up in a stretch duel, which saw the first-named pair take the decision in the second race. Garden Message, which Pete Bostwick took away from the post last, was third. Marooned went steadily up as the betting progressed and paid a handsome $18.40 mutuel. Good Advice went away in front, but Steffen had Marooned close up. Turning into the stretch the two were neck and neck. Marooned had a half-length advantage at the sixteenth pole, but Good Advice came again, only to lose the decision by a nose. Bostwick did not miss his usual booing when he weighed out.

Pilate went to the post a 1-2 shot, and with a jockey who had not ridden a race in years. However, the A. Schuttinger star won as his rider pleased. Merrily On was second and Gold Step third. The winning rider was E. Gorman, who was injured in a fall at Saartoga some years ago. Earl Sande was hurt in the same spill-up. Gorman has been galloping horses for a year. He appeared to know all about Pilate and made the winning margin as close as he could.

St. Brideaux in Victory.

St. Brideaux was not left at the post yesterday. Instead Bobby Jones broke him in front and had to take him back to lay behind the pace-setting of Blenheim. On the far turn Jones called on St. Brideaux for speed and the St. Germans colt stepped to the front. Blenheim slowed, and Scuttle came up to be second. In the stretch Kincsen came through with her usual rush. This time it was good enough for second money. The show went to Scuttle. St. Brideaux was the second odds-on favorite to win, paying a $3.80 mutuel.

Devitt Prep Defeats Newport News, 7 to 6

Newport News, Va., Nov. 19.—Devitt Prep defeated Newport News High here today, 7 to 6, on a sloppy field. A 59-yard run by Latano, followed by a 3-yard buck over center by Mortimer, gave Devitt its touchdown early in the third period. Mortimer circled end for the extra point.

Newport News scored in the first period on a 45-yard drive with Greene going over the 3-yard line after Brockwell had intercepted a pass. Bohlen's try for extra point by a forward pass was knocked down.

7 GAMES ON SOCCER BILL TODAY

TODAY'S SCHEDULE.

CAPITAL CITY LEAGUE.

All Games 2:30 o'Clock.

Columbia Heights Blacks vs. Brandywine. Monument No. 2. Jack Caldwell, referee.

Columbia Heights Grays vs. Rockville, at Rockville. Melly Carleton, referee.

RECREATION LEAGUE.

Rosedale vs. Virginia Avenue. Monument No. 2 (1 o'clock). George Youngblood, referee.

TODAY Washington soccerists will break all records for the number of games played in a day. Seven matches have been scheduled in the two leagues, Capital City and Recreation, three in the former and four in the latter. The previous high mark was six games.

Featuring the Recreation League tilts will be the Virginia Avenue-Rosedale game on Monument, No. 2, at 1 o'clock. Rosedale is leading the league at present by the narrow margin of 1 point. Virginia Avenue is the runner-up and the Southeast boys are bent on supplanting the leaders, while Rosedale would greatly improve its position by increasing its lead at the expense of the Virginia Avenue kickers.

Dux Club Makes Debut Here.

A new team, the Dux Soccer Club, composed mostly of Italian boys, will make its debut in the Recreation League this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock on the Monument Grounds. Raymond will oppose the newest local eleven and should prove a real test.

Chevy Chase will be host to Bloomingdale and the followers of the former expect it to make a much better showing than earlier in the season for several reasons. First, several new players of ability have been added, and second, the team will be playing on its home field for the first time.

Park View will have to stop New York avenue to stay in the running for the first half. The New York Avenue kickers are dangerous foes for any of the Recreation League clubs and can never be taken lightly.

The best Capital City League game will be at Rockville, where the Columbia Heights Grays will vie with the home squad. The Grays are battling Marlboro for the lead in the circuit, but they have a real hurdle to take in Rockville. The Marylanders also have championship aspiration.

Columbia Heights Blacks will play Brandywine on the Monument Grounds, and should not have a great deal of trouble in stopping the Maryland kickers. Concord and Gaithersburg will play at Gaithersburg and it looks like Gaithersburg by a couple of goals.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WELCOME GIFT, $6.80, $3.30, $2.70; BRIGHT SHADOW, $3.60, $3.20; XANDRA, $8.20.

WELCOME GIFT, showing good ability in the footing, displaced LADY LEGEND when leaving the back stretch, was kept off the lunger rail after moving clear, but had to be shaken up to withstand BRIGHT SHADOW. Latter, outrun for the first half mile, closed fast when in full stride. XANDRA went forwardly placed and outfinished LADY LEGEND in the final drive. LADY LEGEND had good early speed, lost ground when entering the home stretch and weakened under punishment. BLACK SHEEP saved a lot of ground. TACTFUL was outrun. LEZEY was never a factor.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAROONED, $18.40, $9.80, $7.70; GOOD ADVICE, $8.50, $4.50; GARDEN MESSAGE, $3.20.

MAROONED, well handled and rated along when GOOD ADVICE was rushed to the front, came courageously when put to a drive and outfinished GOOD ADVICE after gaining a brief lead. GOOD ADVICE rushed hard from the start, continued mostly when vigorously urged. GARDEN MESSAGE, taken up with the break, closed with a tremendous rush on his own courage. PROJECTILE had no excuses when racing on the outside of his company. HELIOS was outrun. SILK FLAG was kept in the deeper footing on the inside and flattened out badly.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200. The Tip Top Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, same. Went to post at 2:12. Off at 2:16. Winner, A. Shuttinger's ch. c. (4), by Friar Rock—Herodias. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:47 2-5, 1:12 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PILATE, $3.00, $2.80, $2.60; MERRILY ON, $5.30, $4.10; GOLD STEP, $3.80.

PILATE, outstanding his company and suited by the footing, went into an easy lead, stalled off repeated efforts from GOLD STEP. Gorman began looking back when his mount drew clear, and had to shake PILATE up nearing the end. MERRILY ON, prominent all the way, closed easily under weak handling. GOLD STEP forced a steady early pace and continued gamely. MORSEL, kept on the outside throughout, could not improve his position. SCOUT MASTER was making up ground through the final stages. The others were outrun.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,400; allowances. The Shenandoah. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 2:45. Off at 2:45½. ST. BRIDEAUX, taken in hand until nearing the turn for the stretch, wore BLENHEIM down when ready and finished with speed to spare. KINCSEN, a distant trailer for seven furlongs, circled her field and closed full of run. SCUTTLE, a stout factor the entire journey, saved ground and held on well in the final half mile. BLENHEIM, steadied along until forced to a drive, tired and finished extremely wide. MAGYAR was done after six furlongs.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $5,000 added. The Prince George Autumn Handicap. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 3:15. Off at 3:17½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CANRON, $20.50, $12.40, $8.00; POMPEIUS, $3.80, $2.70; LARRANAGA, $4.00.

CANRON, hurried into the first division, was put to a drive while on the outside of the pacemakers and moved into third at the final furlong pole and outlasted POMPEIUS in a hard drive. POMPEIUS went into command while under restraint, was kept in the best footing and held on resolutely in the closing drive. LARRANAGA, shuffled back early in the first turn, went to the outside and closed with excellent courage. CURACAO, squeezed back after the start, secured racing room on the back stretch to enter contention, but hung during the final test. PARDEE went forwardly placed and had no mishaps. MARMION was held safe. MICROPHONE was done after six furlongs.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 3:52. Off at 3:56. Winner, M. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WISE ADVOCATE, $16.20, $10.40, $6.30; BLONDISH, $9.90, $5.70; DEEDIE, $5.40.

WISE ADVOCATE improved his position readily when reaching the back stretch, moved into the lead with a rush when approaching the home stretch and strongly ridden just lasted to stall off BLONDISH. Latter, kept near to the pacemakers from the start, made a determined effort when placed to punishment, but could not make up enough ground on the winner nearing the end. DEEDIE, rated forwardly, was put to punishment when reaching the final turn, and closed gamely. GENERAL A., taken under mild restraint when RACCOON was rushed into the lead, weakened fast after making a bold effort midway of the final turn. FRIGATE BIRD saved ground. RACCOON was made too much use of. SUNVIR showed a dull effort.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 4:26. Off at 4:28½. Winner, Brookmeade Stable's b. g. (4), by Asha Khan—Arrowshaft. Trained by R. A. Smith. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:50 2-5, 1:16 3-5, 1:45, 2:00.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—POTENTATE, $15.70, $8.00, $4.40; QUIVER, $7.00, $3.90; FAYLIN, $2.80.

POTENTATE sprinted into a commanding lead at once, went along under restraint until challenged and responded gamely to stall off QUIVER. Latter improved her position gradually, drew on almost equal terms with the winner, but weakened right at the end. FAYLIN, prominent early, finished with good speed. REFORM, well up early, tired in the final quarter mile. ZAMBLA raced well. THOUGHTS could never trouble the leaders. BUSHMAN labored when kept in the deeper footing the entire trip and would not extend himself.

No Mat Bouts Listed By Turner This Week

Washington's rassling fans must struggle through life without a show this week, Promoter Joe Turner having allowed Thanksgiving to take his usual night.

Jim Londos will be the next attraction at the Washington Auditorium, on December 1. He will rassle a yet-to-be named opponent, who probably will be Gino Garibaldi.

It is probable that the politics of rassling will forestall the proposed meeting between Steele and Garibaldi, which was to have been the semifinal round of a tournament Promoter Turner is now staging. Steele is being groomed for a match against Strangler Lewis—the winner of which will meet Londos for that championship.

Maryland Frosh Game Canceled Due to Rain

Heavy rain yesterday caused University of Maryland and Western Maryland College to cancel their freshmen football contest scheduled at College Park. The clash was to have been the final of the season for the Old Line yearlings. It was impossible to postpone the game as the Maryland yearling season was scheduled to close by November 19.

Maryland's final record included 12-to-0 and 25-to-6 victories over the V. M. I. and St. John's freshmen, respectively, and losses to the Virginia and Washington and Lee yearlings, each by a 6-to-0 count. The eleven was coached by Jack Faber.

U. S. RALLIES FOR VICTORY AT POLO

Santa Paula Loses in First Encounter of Series.

BUENOS AIRES, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Winston Guesta's Meadowbrook Four rallied for five goals in the fifth and sixth chukkers to defeat Santa Paula, 9 to 6, in the first game of the polo series between the United States and Argentina for the Cup of the Americas.

A crowd of 19,000 braved a drizzling rain to watch the international encounter, a hard-fought contest between evenly matched sides.

Trailing, 6 to 4, after four periods, the North Americans tied the count at 6-all in the fifth chukker on goals by Guest and Billy Post, and then clinched it with a three-goal barrage in the next period on accurate shots by Guest, Michael Phipps and Elmer Roseeke.

Guest was the power-house of the Meadowbrook attack, scoring four times himself and setting up the ball for his mates on several other occasions. Andrada was the Argentines' bulwark, though his hitting was strangely inaccurate. Santa Paula, as a team, lacked the balance Meadowbrook showed.

Need Only One More Win.

The North Americans need one more victory to clinch the cup, donated by President Justo. The next game probably will be played next Saturday.

Ohio University Beats Ohio Wesleyan, 25-0

Delaware, Ohio, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Ohio University drubbed Ohio Wesleyan today, 25 to 0, to win second place in the Buckeye Conference.

The Bobcats climaxed a 70-yard first-period drive with a touchdown by Robinette, added six more points in the second quarter after Snyder recovered a blocked punt, and finished the half with a third score on a pass, Brown to Collins. The Bishops braced in the second half and pushed once to the 20-yard line. Brown, Bobcat half back, intercepted a pass and ran 55 yards for Ohio University's final touchdown in the third period.

MICHIGAN WINS BIG TEN TITLE ON NEWMAN'S PLACE KICK

Gophers Bow In Thrilling Game, 3-0

Winning Points Come Within 36 Seconds of First Half.

Manders, Playing Last Game, Fumbles to Set the Stage.

By ROY F. HENDRICKSON.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—It was fourth down, 4 yards to go for goal, with 36 seconds remaining in the first half today, when Harry Newman, Michigan quarter back, decided to stake his team's chances for an undisputed Big Ten title on his right foot.

He booted a high place kick, it narrowly missed an upright, but soared safely over to provide the margin of a 3-to-0 victory over Minnesota, giving the Wolverines the title and a claim on the mythical national football championship. Purdue, undefeated in the Western Conference, is forced into second place because of a tie with Northwestern earlier in the season.

A Minnesota fumble shortly before had paved the way for Newman's opportunity to keep unblemished Michigan's record of eight victories and no defeats or ties this season. The Gophers, fighting the desperate battle of underdogs, matched defensive energies in every period, led in the number of first downs, 3 to 2, and had the highest total of gains and stopped Michigan's dangerous passing attack centering about Newman.

Manders' Fumble Costly.

For Jack Manders, big Gopher full back playing his last college game, there was a touch of tragedy in the outcome, the final game of the season for the old rivals.

He was, with Charles Bernard, Michigan center, an outstanding defense player, but it was his fumble near the end of the second period that turned the tide for Michigan before the 30,000 frost-bitten spectators.

Manders caught a low pass from center with the tips of his fingers and as the ball slid out of his grasp, Bernard and Fred Petoskey, Michigan end, recovered it on the Minnesota 28-yard line.

Newman's pass game was stopped at less critical times, but in the next sequence of plays it counted for all of the 18 yards it brought his team during the day. A pass to Fay was good for 8 yards. Fay plunged for 4 more, and Everhardus lost 4. Then Newman shot a pass down the center of the field to Petoskey, who was hauled down only 3 yards short of the goal. Fay lost a yard, and as Michigan faced its final down, with 4 yards to go, Newman dropped back to kick at an angle with Fay holding the ball.

Lund Gets Away For Run.

After his kick, neither team made its way within 30 yards of the other's goal. Only once did Minnesota threaten seriously. That was in the third period when the Gophers accounted for all their three first downs. Pug Lund, half back, the day's leading ground gainer, broke into the open on a dash through tackle.

Only Newman, coming up quickly from his safety position, remained between Lund and the goal, but as Lund attempted to dodge the Wolverine, he slipped and ended his 13-yard run without much effort on Newman's part.

Most of the game resolved itself down to a punting duel between Regeczi, Michigan full back, and Lund, in which the Wolverines easily led, averaging 40 yards on 20 kicks, to 32 in 16 kicks by Minnesota.

Unbeaten Purdue Keeps Slate Clean

Ends Season With 25-to-7 Win Over Indiana; Tie Costs Title Share.

Ross-Ade Stadium, Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Purdue's Boilermakers ran and passed their way to a 25-to-7 victory over Indiana University here today, completing an undefeated football season, in which a tie game prevented their sharing the Western Conference title.

The sweeping dashes of Fred Hecker and Duane Purvis, half backs, around the Indiana ends, and the long, looping passes which Paul Moss, great Purdue wingman, caught twice in a clear field, brought victory in the annual Hoosier classic and assured the Boilermakers possession of the "Old Oaken Bucket" for another year.

One touchdown in the first quarter, two in the second and one in the third were the result of the dazzling speed of the Purdue attack. The Crimson eleven fought back in the final quarter to drive 45 yards for its only touchdown.

The forward walls of the Big Ten rivals fought a bitter battle throughout the game on fairly even terms, but the Indiana flanks gave way before the Boilermaker thrusts and, despite an alert secondary, the tall Moss slipped into the clear for pass-receiving.

Iowa Loses, 44-6, To Northwestern

Wildcats Run Wild After Scoreless First Period; Hawkeyes Luckless.

Dyche Stadium, Evanston, Ill., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—In biting cold weather, Northwestern closed its season today by beating Iowa, 44 to 6, and handing the Hawkeyes, who have not won a game in Western Conference competition since 1929, their worst rout of the season.

The Wildcats, after a scoreless first period, ran wild in the second and fourth, chalking up three touchdowns in each, and threw in another one in the third period for good measure.

The game, aggressive Hawkeyes were the victims of heartbreaking reverses in the form of intercepted passes that were quickly turned into touchdowns, either directly or indirectly.

Even Ernest "Pug" Rentner, Northwestern's captain and all-American half back of 1931, participated in the scoring carnival in the fourth period, despite two cracked ribs. After Augustson had scored once in this session, Rentner came into the game to the cheers of the shivering throng of 14,000 spectators. He did nothing but stand by and watch while his mates advanced the ball to Iowa's 1-foot line. Then his teammates split the Iowa defense wide open, handed him the ball and he ran through to score the touchdown standing up.

FRATERS VIE TODAY WITH MERIDIANS

Special to The Washington Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 19.—Local football fans will have an opportunity of witnessing a great football game at Baggett's stadium tomorrow afternoon when the Meridians, of Washington, come here for their initial battle with the Alexandria Fraters at 2:30 o'clock.

Ray Smith, former National League pro football coach, is leader of the Washington team and he has developed a fast, powerful and tricky eleven that will give the Fraters a hard battle.

Kessler is the triple threat for the visiting team, while King, Jordan and Rudy are powerful forwards, having played several seasons of scholastic football.

Doc Dreifus, former Tulane star, who is head coach of the Alexandrians, hopes to have a powerful club on the field. Dreifus is fortunate in having two punters and passers in Goodwin and McMenamin that can make any club in this section.

The Fraters will also be aided by the return of Ellet Cabell, triple threat to the back field. Ellet wrenched his ankle in the Hopkins game and witnessed the Seaman Gunners game from the bench last week.

Dummy Watson, who starred here last season in the Meridians' game, against the Engine Company No. 5 eleven, will play again in the back field. His work will be closely watched.

Others with the Meridians are Turner, Scevidi and Bush.

Manager Scrivener, of the Praters, has had the sidelines roped off and asks for cooperation from the fans in remaining off the field so as to speed up play and eliminate any disputes on out-of-bound runs.

Hopkins Furniture Store gridders tomorrow will play the Brentwood Hawks, powerful Maryland eleven, who earlier in the campaign held the Alexandria Fraters to a 6-6 tie and also hold the honor of being the first foreign club to cross the Fraters' goal line at Baggett's Stadium.

Manager Rivenburg, of the Storemen, today was granted permission to use Duncan's field for his team's game against the Hawks.

The Storemen will drill at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at Laydon's Field to be ready for the contest. Rube Hayman, coach, will take charge of the work-out.

Herbert Bryant's Powerful No. 5 football team treks to Ballston, Va., tomorrow for a game with the Arlington A. C., leaders in the series for the unlimited football crown in Northern Virginia.

Charlie Potter, former back field star with the Hopkins team, will make his debut in the Firefighters' line-up. Baber, husky guard, who has been out with injuries, also will play.

The Firefighters have held several snappy scrimmages this week at the Municipal Pool field to be on edge for the Arlington encounter.

Manager Johnny Travers, of the Virginia A. C., today scheduled the United Fellers eleven, for a game in Washington tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Virginians will leave Prince and Royal streets at 1 o'clock.

Bill Hammond, Pirate leader, will carry his club to Friendship field tomorrow for a battle with the Cleveland A. C.

St. Rita's football team mixes with the Temple A. C., of Washington, on Hunton Field, at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Marvin Myers, former Apaches triple-threat, is coach of the Saints and has developed a fast eleven.

Ottey finished a quarter of a mile ahead of the pack in the record time of 25:20.2 for the 5-mile course. The old record was 26:35.8, held by Lauren P. Brown, former State star and now Spartan Coach.

Illinois State Normal took second place in the team score and Michigan Normal was third. Notre Dame was last. The team scores were: Michigan State 27, Illinois Normal 51, Michigan Normal 68, Western State Teachers 69, and Notre Dame 108.

WOODBERRY NEW STATE CHAMPION

Episcopal High Bows, 13-0; Mason and Andrews Score.

Special to The Washington Post.

WOODBERRY FOREST, Va., Nov. 19—Woodberry Forest completed an undefeated season here this afternoon and captured the State championship by defeating Episcopal High School, of Alexandria, 13-0.

With the going heavy in mud, Woollen took Gooch's punt on his own 45-yard line in the first quarter and shot up the sidelines to Episcopal's 15-yard stripe. Two unsuccessful plays stopped Woodberry temporarily, but on the third down Mason went the distance on a spinner play through the center of the line. Woollen's place kick was low.

In the third period, the locals took the ball on their own 45-yard line and, with Woollen and Andrews contributing substantial gains outside and inside the tackles, marched to their second touchdown. Andrews rammed the ball over from the 4-yard line. Woollen's place kick for the extra point was good.

Episcopal made its only bid for a score in the final quarter. A completed pass from Woodruff to Tucker gave the visitors the ball on their own 40-yard line. Using forwards and latters's, interspersed with line smashes, they advanced to Woodberry's 25-yard line, where they were held for downs. The first downs stood 15 to 4 in favor of Woodberry.

BUCKEYES 3-0 WINNERS IN FINALE

By WILLIAM WEEKS.

MEMORIAL STADIUM, Champaign, Ill., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Its last desperate drive for a touchdown stalled by an Illinois defense that was just as desperate, Ohio State called Mickey Vuchinick back into action today to place-kick the Buckeyes to a 3-to-0 triumph, in a thrilling Western Conference football final.

With less than four minutes to play in the fourth period, a scoreless tie appeared the best either of the bruised, nearly frozen groups of warriors could expect. Even with the Buckeyes, Lew Hinchman, Bill Carroll and Carl Cramer, passing and battering goalward, the slow going and inspired Illinois defense made the Ohio cause appear bleak.

With the ball on the Illinois 9-yard line, Cramer and Carroll took three shots at running plays only to wind up with a net gain of exactly nothing. Ohio State took time out. Capt. Hinchman signaled for Vuchinick, who had been replaced by Wetzel, and with Cramer holding the ball, the big full back put his 196 pounds behind a kick that sailed squarely between the goal posts.

Long Pass Goes To Rival.

The game ended a few moments later, with Ohio in possession of the ball, following Hinchman's interception of a long, make-or-break pass by Capt. Gil Berry.

Less than 8,000 spectators huddled in three little patches in the stands as first the Illini and then Ohio staged thrilling plays that took some of the edge off the biting cold. As the game neared the finish anyone in the place would have been glad to settle for a scoreless draw.

The winning assault started on the Ohio State 46-yard line, where Cramer received Jack Beynon's kick. On the next play Hinchman tossed a pass to Cramer on the Illinois 43-yard line. Expecting another overhead shot, the Illini loosened up and Carroll drifted through a hole in the center of the line for 7 yards.

From there on Hinchman, Carroll, Wetzel and Cramer jammed through the line to the 9-yard mark, where the Illini made a gallant stand. Then Vuchinick came in to make the finishing gesture.

Detroit Defeated By Michigan State

Spartans Win Their First Victory Over Rivals in Nine Years.

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 19 (A.P.). After nine lean years, Michigan State College came back today to defeat its traditional gridiron enemy, the University of Detroit, 7 to 0.

Breaking through time and again to smear the vaunted Detroit passing attack, the Spartans launched an offensive of their own built around the fleet-footed Bernard McNutt, full back. It was McNutt's 34-yard dash early in the first period which brought State's lone touchdown. Bob Monnett kicked the extra point.

The Spartans unleashed their attack early in the game, after an exchange of punts. Eliowitz tossed a lateral pass to Monnett for a 16-yard gain. On the next play McNutt broke through the line, laid his course along the sidelines and crossed the Titan goal line. Detroit's most promising thrust ended against an impregnable Spartan line on State's 14-yard stripe in the second period. In the third period State pushed through to the Detroit 1-yard line, but the Titans held.

NAVY PLEBES WIN FROM COOK, 6-0

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 19.—The Naval Academy Plebes proved better mudders than the eleven of Cook Academy, of Montour Falls, N. Y., and won a loosely played game here today, 6 to 0.

The game marked the close of the season for the Naval yearlings and it was one of the most successful on record. They rolled up a total of 133 points in six games, and held opposing teams without a tally of any sort. Today's win also avenged the defeat administered by Cook last season, to spoil a spotless record for the Plebes.

The game was not 5 minutes old when Rankin, Plebe back, broke off Cook's right tackle and picked his way through a broken field for a dash of 64 yards for the only touchdown. The Plebes made an unsuccessful attempt at the point by rushing.

Pools of water and inches of mud covered the field as a result of heavy rains last night and early today, and fumbles were frequent. The Plebes played a superior game in every department except kicking, and in that Atterbury, Cook's right guard, held the edge. The Naval lads exhibited a smashing attack that covered much ground, but in four instances they were unable to develop the final punch. Twice early in the game, they had the ball 3 yards from the enemy's goal, only to lose on fumbles, and in two other instances were held for downs just inside the 10-yard marker.

The final whistle halted a fifth drive, 7 yards from the coveted line. Cook made only one threat. That was shortly after the second period got under way, when Allen broke away for a 49-yard dash to Navy's 15. Unable to advance farther, a Cook pass was intercepted by Evans, Plebe full back, who galloped 65 yards, being brought down by Devic on Cook's 20.

JACKETS WIN, 14-0, FROM ROANOKE

Blocked Punt Leads to First Marker for Randolph-Macon.

SALEM, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Randolph-Macon grabbed every break that a slippery field offered to defeat Roanoke College, 14 to 0, here this afternoon in the final game of the year for both elevens.

The Yellow Jackets blocked a punt on the 4-yard line late in the first quarter for the first touchdown, added 2 points on a safety in the second and covered a fumble on the Roanoke 6-yard stripe just after the opening of the third period to clear the path for the final score.

The Maroons put up a game fight that netted seven first downs to the Yellow Jackets' four but fumbled repeatedly to bring on their downfall. Four times Roanoke backs fumbled deep in their own territory and lost the ball to Randolph-Macon. Two blocked punts, one of which led to the first touchdown, close to the goal, almost tended to take the vigor out of their campaigns.

The opening score came after Randolph-Macon had lost the ball on downs on the Roanoke 6-yard line. The Maroons ran the ball out to the 12-yard before Matthew dropped back to punt. Beall, Yellow Jacket left end, blocked the kick, which Compton recovered on the 4-yard marker. Delotto scored on a lateral from Ames, substitute for Hess. The identical play on the try for point failed.

Fumbles Behind Goal Line.

Midway in the second quarter Beall punted to the Maroon 4-yard line, where Delotto downed the ball. Miley, Roanoke full back, fumbled behind the goal line on second down and was unable to pull out before the Methodist line swamped him in his tracks for the safety.

The second touchdown came after a fumble 6 yards from the Maroon goal. Beall had backed the Roanoke gridders up against the goal line on a nice punt that Rice received on the 10-yard line. Fumbling on the first play, Weeks gave the ball to the Yellow Jackets, who quickly pushed across the score. Aided by a 5-yard penalty, Delotto scored the touchdown, but failed to make the point on a line plunge.

UTAH GRIDMEN WIN.

Fort Collins, Colo., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Utah's rampaging Utes presented one of their most finished performances of the season today to defeat a determined Colorado Aggie Team, 16 to 0, and clinched their fifth consecutive Rocky Mountain football title.

The victory establishes a five-year unblemished record in conference competition for the Utes, who have not been defeated since their 12-to-0 loss to the Colorado Farmers here in 1927.

GENEVA BEATS WESTMINSTER.

Beaver Falls, Pa., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Geneva defeated Westminister, 19 to 0, in the closing game of the season for both teams.

Clyde Johnston broke through Westminster line for a 48-yard run and a touchdown in the first period, and he scored a second touchdown in the third period after Geneva drove 62 yards in a sustained offensive. Johnson added one point after touchdown, for a scoring total of 13 points. Heffley counted the final touchdown with a 77-yard run.

Col. Huston to Aid Atlanta Ball Club

Former Ruppert Partner to Be Cracker Director and Adviser.

Atlanta, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Better times were promised for the Atlanta Club of the Southern Association today, for a "big time" baseball man, Col. Tillinghast L. Huston, former coowner of the New York Yankees, is coming back to the game as director and adviser of the Crackers.

He's going to forsake the life of a country gentleman he began on his plantation near Darien, Ga., eight years ago and turn his hand toward putting new life in the team that went into receivership recently. The first thing he plans is a journey to Memphis, Tenn., Monday to represent Atlanta at the Southern Association's annual meeting.

Attorneys for the club made the bare announcement of his advent into Southern baseball and said the "new organization will be amply backed financially." Beyond that, they refused to comment on plans for rehabilitating the team for the forthcomfng season.

It was Col. Huston who built the Yankee Stadium and shared with Col. Jacob Ruppert in ownership of the New York American League team for fourteen years.

W. & M. WINS, 18-6, OVER E. & H.

Palese Is Indian Star, Scoring All of His Team's Points.

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Billy Palese, William and Mary half back, scored all of the Indians' touchdowns today in their 18-to-6 triumph over Emory and Henry's Wasps.

After the Wasps had outplayed the Indians on the muddy gridiron in the first period, Palese took matters into his own hands to clinch the victory. A 47-yard touchdown run was followed by another 22-yard scoring gallop and a third touchdown was bucked over from the 1-yard line.

Both teams played orthodox football most of the way, and only one of four passes tried was completed.

Marshall, Wasp quarter back, gave the Homecoming Day crowd the biggest thrill of the afternoon when he tucked an Indian punt under his arm and twisted and squirmed 60 yards through the William and Mary defense for a touchdown. Early in the second period the Indians began a drive from their own 30-yard line that ended with Palese scoring on a short line buck, after featuring the advance with 15 and 21 yard runs.

Marshall's brilliant third-period run tied the score, but the Indians came back with a couple of touchdowns that were more than enough to win.

56-Yard Run By Palese.

Three plays after the kick-off Palese shook himself loose and sprinted 56 yards for a score, and in the fourth period the sensational Indian half back sprinted 22 yards for a touchdown after receiving a pass from Shade.

The game ended with the ball in midfield.

William and Mary counted thirteen first downs to none for the Wasps and completed one of two passes tried. Neither of two Wasp aerials connected.

Marquette Downs Wash.-Jeff. Eleven

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A 15-yard forward pass which climaxed an 80-yard march resulted in a touchdown and gave Marquette University's football team a 6-to-0 victory over Washington and Jefferson here today.

The game was played before a handful of shivering spectators, as the feature event of Marquette's annual Dads' Day. The Hilltoppers' score came in the second period after a Washington and Jefferson punt rolled into the end zone.

Marquette took possession on its own 20-yard line and advanced by a mixture of passes and line plays, with Capt. Gene Ronzani doing most of the ball lugging and all of the passing. It began with a 10-yard gain by Ronzani and ended with a pass from Ronzani to McEssy, which the latter caught a few yards from the goal. He ran unmolested the remaining few steps. Becker's attempted place kick was blocked.

The Presidents threatened three times, but never penetrated closer than the Hilltoppers' 8-yard line. They got to that point in the third period, but lost the ball after a pass was grounded in an end zone.

Rometo, a tiny quarter back, with an elusive twist and change of pace, proved a constant thorn in the side of the Hilltoppers with his punt returns. The good kicking of Zagray was matched by Becker's long, high spirals.

West Virginia Wins, 25-12, in Snow Flurries

Morgantown, W. Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Playing in snow flurries and on a water-logged field, Greasy Neale's fighting West Virginia Mountaineers turned back Davis-Elkins, 25 to 12 today.

Only 3,000 fans braved the inclement weather to watch a game packed with thrills—the most exciting of any played in the Mountaineer Stadium this year.

The triumph of the Mountaineers was largely due to the efforts of Harry (Ducky) Marker, who plunged off tackle, caught passes and tore around ends to score two touchdowns and help his mates into position for others.

SAINTS EASY FOR TIGER ELEVEN

Hampden-Sydney Defeats St. John's in Mud, 25 to 7.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Hampden Sydney ran mudshod over the mud-spattered St. John's (Annapolis) eleven here today, 25-7, in a battle over a rain-soaked field.

St. John's held the Tigers scoreless in the first period, but the Johnnies' defense gave way in the second, third and fourth quarters.

With a desperate spurt in the closing minutes, the Marylanders scored their touchdown. Kilmore, 137-pound quarter back, first made a 28-yard forward pass. He followed this performance with a 9-yard end run, and a plunge for the score. Evans kicked the extra point.

It took the first period for both elevens to get used to the slush. The initial quarter developed into a kicking duel, with St. John's holding the advantage.

Tigers Gain Ball on One-Foot Line.

Ten yards were lost when a passer was downed behind the line of scrimmage. A fumble and a bad pass from center gave the ball to the Tigers on the 1-foot line. Two plays resulted in the first touchdown. Daughtrey bucked it over. Spottswood kicked the extra point from placement. The rest of the quarter was spent in punting.

The Tigers scored again in the third period, when Humphries, standing on his own 40-yard line, dashed around end for an uninterrupted sprint to the goal line. The play started from punt formation and was good for 50 yards.

St. John's had opened the half with a masterful aerial attack, which carried the ball to the Tiger 17-yard line. Here, however, the offensive was surrendered.

Hampden Sydney cut loose again in the final quarter. St. John's lost ground in a punting duel, but they repulsed the Tigers once on the goal line. The second Tiger assault was successful, however, White going over for the tally. The fourth touchdown came when Nottingham intercepted a pass and ran 20 yards for the score.

It was at this point that St. John's started its drive that staved off a shut-out.

The game was witnessed by a slim crowd, the gridiron was a quagmire, and the players slipped frequently. The Johnnies wore rubber togs. A yellow night ball was used for the game. The Tigers started the game with jersies and headgears that were white.

Rice Beaten, 16-6, By Texas Christian

Owls Play Inspired Game, But Are Finally Defeated by Foe.

Houston, Tex., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Texas Christian University eleven continued its steady campaign toward the Southwest Conference football championship here today, downing Rice Institute, 16 to 6, but finding a worthy foeman.

Rice men, for one period—the third—played like champions, pounding the heavy Christian line in a 75-yard march, headed by the sophomore back, Bill Wallace, that ended in a touchdown when McKinnon took a 23-yard pass over the T. C. U. goal line.

During most of the game, however, Texas Christian was out of danger. Its squad got away to a quick start, "Red" Oliver snaring a pass from Hubert Dennis for 35 yards and a touchdown within a minute after play had begun. Dennis kicked goal. The period had not ended before T. C. U. was marking up a score again, this time a field goal by Otha Tiner. Texas Christian's second touchdown came late in the fourth period, when Langdon, sub end, intercepted a Rice pass and ran 20 yards to the goal.

T. C. U. completed seven passes for a total of 772 yards and Rice six for 66 yards. The Owls showed a net gain from scrimmage of 71 yards to 44 for Texas Christian.

Jefferson High Wins From Glass Gridders

Roanoke, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Magicians of Jefferson High School defeated the E. C. Glass grid warriors of Lynchburg, 26 to 0, on a sloppy field here today.

Jefferson scored in three periods, Johnson accounting for two touchdowns and Clark and Humphries one each. Williams place kicked two extra points. The Glass team never seriously threatened to score.

Virginia in Brief Drill For Carolina Contest

University, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The University of Virginia Cavaliers omitted rough work today in a brief drill between the showers in preparation for Thanksgiving Day's game with North Carolina.

Augusta and Fives Battle to 0-to-0 Tie

Special to The Washington Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 19.—Augusta Military Academy and the Fives, senior team of the Charlottesville School for Boys, fought to a scoreless tie in the mud on Lambeth Field this afternoon.

Each team was held within the 5-yard line during the first half. The Cadets, in desperation, tried a pass which was incompleted. In the second quarter the Fives had to surrender the ball on downs on the 2-yard mark. Again in the third quarter the locals advanced the ball to Augusta's 3-yard mark, where it was lost on downs. Line-up:

West Liberty Wins By Score of 137 to 0

Wheeling, W. Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—West Liberty Teachers ran wild on the gridiron against Cedarville College of Ohio today, rolling up 137 points while holding their opponents scoreless.

The winners counted 20 touchdowns, 11 of which were carried over the goal line by Half Back Joe Kershalla. He also kicked 5 extra points.

Kershalla, taking the ball for West Liberty on the first play, ran 70 yards for a score. He carried the ball for distances of between 23 and 70 yards in accounting for his other touchdowns. Venlskey, with three touchdowns, and five extra points, was second high scorer. Touchdowns were registered so rapidly that confused scorers did not determine the correct score until three hours after the game ended. West Liberty scored 38 points in the first period, 48 in the second, 26 in the third and 28 in the last.

GA. TECH 6-0 VICTOR OVER FLORIDA

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Taking advantage of a Florida fumble on the 3-yard line, Georgia Tech pushed over a touchdown late in the second period here today to win from the Gators, 6 to 0, before a homecoming crowd of 15,000.

On three other occasions, the Yellow Jackets advanced almost to the Florida goal line, but missed scoring by inches when the crippled Gators, offering subborn resistance, repulsed the drive.

Honors in the fray went to W. A. Davis, Tech substitute half back, who slithered through the Florida line consistently to account for 91 of the 200 yards rolled up from scrimmage by the Jackets.

HYATTSVILLE QUINTETS IN ACTION

National Guard Team Will Meet Laurel Tomorrow Night.

WHAT promises to be a banner basket ball season for independent teams in Hyattsville and environs is being launched in earnest. Several quints already have appeared in a number of engagements and Company F, National Guard, which for many campaigns has been represented on the hardwood by capable combinations, will present its team for the first time tomorrow night against a Laurel combination on the armory court in Hyattsville.

Lustine-Nicholson Juniors, Richards & Son and Hyattsville A. C. are among quints of this section which already have started their schedules.

Company F will play tomorrow night at 8 o'clock, the game being a feature of a benefit program for Snyder-Farmer Post, No. 3, American Legion. The Guardsmen, who will drill this morning at 11 o'clock, plan to put a combination on the floor that will compare favorably with the formidable teams that have carried the company's colors in past campaigns. Players being heavily counted upon include Jack Williams, Bobby Shanklin, Bernard Troy, John Costinett, Sammy Crosthwait, Fenton Cogar, Burdette Cogar, Sammy Townsend, Harry Hegarty, Donald Burrhus, Paul Lehman, Peewee Bassford and Billy Spicknall.

Lustine-Nicholson Juniors, with a group of clever players, already have tucked away several victories. An unlimited team, made up largely of members of the University of Maryland Southern Conference championship quint of two seasons ago, also will represent Lustine-Nicholson, and will start play about December 1.

Richards & Son tossers, playing in the 145-pound class, have won three games in as many starts. Most members of this squad held forth last winter with the Shipley Juniors and the year before with the Shipley Midgets. Leading players are Warren Kidwell, Curley Byrd, jr., Burdette Cogar, Donald Hollingsworth, York Hollingsworth, Doug McChesney, Nathaniel Mostow, Stanley Bowers and Jack Cain.

Hyattsville A. C., coached by Rich Reeley, former Company F stalwart, has started well and boasts an array of capable players, including Williams, Troy, Paul Reeley, Thomas, Spicknall, Kitchin, McCann and Weber.

Duke Wins Conference Cross-Country Crown

Chapel Hill, N. C., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Duke lifted the Southern Conference cross-country title from North Carolina in the annual run here today, with Jerry Bray and Bob Bird tying for first place in the fine time of 27 minutes 21.8 seconds and with Capt. Red Lewis finishing 100 yards behind in third place.

Galem Elliott, of Carolina, set the record for the 5-mile course at 26 minutes 26 seconds in 1927. But today's time was exceptional in view of the rainy weather and slick and heavy course.

The scores: Duke, 23; North Carolina, 45; V. M. I., 68; Tennessee, 125; Washington and Lee and Mississippi also competed, but did not finish enough men to get in the scoring.

LANE HIGH TRIUMPHS.

Hampton, Va., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Lane High School, of Charlottesville, downed Hampton Crabbers, 7 to 0, here today on a muddy field. The visitors scored in the third quarter on straight football that carried the ball 40 yards for a touchdown. Taylor made the score. Although the Crabbers rallied at times, the Albemarle lads had an advantage most of the way.

DUKE DOWNS N. CAROLINA TEAM, 7-0

Coach Draws Penalty in 1st Win Since 1893 Season.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A grimy, mud-spattered team made football history for Duke University and won the State championship by grinding out a 7-to-0 victory over its neighbor and arch rival, the University of North Carolina, today.

Played on a rain-soaked field before a crowd of 20,000, the largest of the year, the game gave Duke its first victory over the State university since 1893 and broke a two-year scoreless deadlock.

Duke outplayed the Tarheels and the touchdown margin apparently told accurately the difference between the two teams.

In the first quarter the Blue Devils pushed over the only score, and Coach Chuck Collins of North Carolina aided his foe in the winning march by drawing his team a 15-yard penalty. Sent from deep in Duke's territory, Laney's kick struck McCaskill, Tarheel half back, on the back as he went down to protect the receiver. Means, alert Duke guard, fell on the ball on North Carolina's 20.

Coach Collins Aids Duke.

Collins ran onto the field to protest the ruling and Referee Hutchens, secretary of the Southern Conference Officials Association, penalized the Tarheels 15 yards, putting the ball on the 5-yard line.

Capt. Lowell Mason, in two tries at the center of the line, picked up 3 yards; Nick Laney, sophomore half back from Charlotte, then dived across right tackle over the goal line. Corky Cornelius place-kicked for the extra point and the two-year scoreless record had been broken.

SARAZEN LEADS STARS OVER $60,000 WINTER GOLF TRAIL

Coral Gables Next Scene Of Play

$10,000 Prizes Lures Pros to Florida on Nov. 27, 28, 29.

Open at San Francisco and Others on Coast to Follow.

By REX SAFFER.

MIAMI, Fla., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Golfing "forty-niners" seeking gold from low medal scores in winter tournaments from Florida to California and back will match strokes November 27, 28 and 29 at Coral Gables in the second annual $10,000 Miami-Biltmore open, richest in the 1932-33 calendar.

Moved ahead nea. four months as south Florida business men launched their dr've for an earlier start of the tourist season, the tournament and its laden money bags will draw the cream of the professional and amateur golfing clans into the Miami area before Christmas for the first time since the section became a winter golf center.

Sarazen Seeks to Repeat At Miami.

Gene Sarazen, who won top money in the first Miami-Biltmore event, will lead the field of expert club wielders in the approaching tour. The little Italian will try to add a second Miami-Biltmore title to the United States and British open crowns he won last summer.

Tournament officials, admittedly uncertain of the rest of the Miami's winter golf—no definite announcement has been made regarding the holding of the Miami open and the spectacular $5,000 international four-ball matches—are rapidly filling entry lists with the names of great and near-great for the Biltmore event.

The prize list has been devised to cover as much territory as possible, with the leading 40 scorers to share in the pot. First prize is $2,500, second $1,250, third $1,000 and on down to $25.

The Biltmore course will offer a difficult route to gold seekers with its 94 traps and numerous bunkers and water hazards. The course has a par of 71 and a yardage of 6,640. It includes four par 3 holes, three par 5 holes and eleven with pars of 4.

From Coral Gables the fairway prospectors will hustle across the continent to be on hand for the San Francisco open, December 7 to 12, and other rich West Coast events, climaxed by the Agua Caliente open January 11 and 12.

From the Mexican city they swing back East again, stopping off at Phoenix, Ariz.; San Antonio, Tex., and perhaps several other points for the ever-welcome cash before returning to Florida. The grand finale of the winter tour will be, as usual, the North-South open at Pinehurst.

Most of the purses have been slashed, but there still remains something like $60,000 to be divided among the boys who golf for a living.

Southern Methodists Upset by Baylor, 19-0

Waco, Tex., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Southern Methodist Mustangs, 1931 Southwest Conference football champions, invaded Baylor University's Carroll Field for a game today, but neglected to bring along that gridiron fundamental—the art of blocking—and lost, 19 to 0.

Baylor got two touchdowns in the second period and one in the third on passes. Neither team revealed a scoring punch on ground plays.

In defeating the Mustangs, Baylor retained its record of never having lost to Southern Methodist on a Waco gridiron.

Swarthmore Team Wins Second Game of Season

Carlisle, Pa., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A first period break gave Swarthmore College's football team its second victory of the season today with a 6-to-0 win over Dickinson's gridiron warriors on a muddy, rain-soaked field.

Boston U. Crushed By Boston College

Defeated by 21-to-6 Score as Strength Fails to Materialize.

Newton, Mass., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Boston College Eagles put on their first effective attack of the season today to wind up their preliminary season with a 21-6 victor over the Boston University Terriers, whose expected strength failed to materialize.

Coach Joe McKenney started his strongest line-up and, after Johnny Freitas and Pete Chesnulevich registered a pair of touchdowns in the opening session, he yanked his regulars to preserve them for next week's clash with Holy Cross. The Eagle replacements managed to increase their lead by another touchdown in the second session, but the third stringers were outplayed by a wide margin in the third, when the Terriers backed them up to their goal line and scored after downing a punt on B. C.'s 12-yard line.

John Ulman took Dernie Moynihan's short punt, ran it back 13 yards from the 25-yard stripe. He then sliced off his right tackle for 6 more and, after an incomplete pass, scored at right end on a lateral from Quarter Back Tom Leguere.

Freitas counted on Eagles' first pass of the game. An early punting exchange gave the Eagles the ball on B. U.'s 48 and after taking Chesnulevich's heave, he ran 38 yards for the score. Chesnulevich's tally, on an 8-yard plunge, ended the Eagles' 58-yard march. The other Eagle score resulted from a fumbled punt on B. U.'s 13-yard line, Joe Curran, substitute full back, going over after on his fourth lunge at center.

SPEAKING OF TENNIS

By BOB CONSIDINE.

IT is a fine state of affairs when Frank Shore promises to write a scathing letter denouncing tennis in Washington in general, and his own ranking in particular, and then fails to come through. It all conspires to make Speaking of Tennis duller than it has been for some time—perhaps a week.

In rummaging through a disorderly mind in an effort to find some editorial fault with the manner in which tennis was conducted here this season, I make the astounding discovery that it wasn't a bad year: in fact there were several turns of events which move me to paragraphs.

The progress shown by women's tennis this year shaded the realm of men's tennis. Never before has such activity been rampant in women's tennis as during the season which is just now limping to a sudden stop. Led by such splendid and unselfish workers as Mrs. H. Clay Thompson, Mrs. Charles P. Stone, and the general cooperation of perhaps the entire list of tournament women, ladies' tennis shot up to new heights. In Louise Hofmeister, winner of the District championship, local women brought to Washington a national figure for the first time in many years.

Misses Moore, Kirson Prominent.

The effect of all this animation was to cause increased interest in the remaining local tournaments. Two girls who figured prominently in making it a season full of very watchable matches were Sara Moore and Reba Kirson—Sara with her occasional upsets (she defeated Mrs. Ruth Martinez in the District tournament after Mrs. Martinez had beaten her, 6—0, 6—0, for the public parks title) and Reba with her spirited playing and her brave and becoming shorts.

Mrs. Ruth Martinez definitely became the best player, reaching the pedestal that was renounced by Frances Krucoff two years ago and, until late this year, not completely filled. Near the end of the season Mrs. Martinez's improvement became so marked that there is no doubt about her being placed at the top of local women's tennis. Probably she is a better player today, and will be next year, than Miss Krucoff ever was. Her strokes are hit perfectly, and next season, when she adds a trifle more speed to her shots, she will be a prime favorite to win every women's tournament in this sector, and give all but about ten of the best men players here a real battle.

Except for a tension between two of the best women players, which threatened to take on rough-house proportions near the end of the season, there was unprecedented peace within the realm of women's tennis. But what has helped it the most is new faces: girls like Alice Davis, Abbie Sard, Mrs. Wyeth and others, whose failure to gain mention must be laid at the altars of a somewhat anemic memory.

Highlights of Season Noted.

New faces helped men's tennis, also. Highlights of men's tennis were the slew-footed appearance of Ellsworth Vines at Chevy Chase; the spectacle of Bill Tilden lying prone and utterly exhausted in a corridor at Wardman after beating Kozeluh in a five-set professional match; the fact that Dooly Mitchell, for some time now the best tennis player in Washington, again failed to win the District tournament; the default of Tony Latona and Frank Shore for showing up late for the City of Washington doubles; the decline of Tom Mangan; the victory of Clarence Charest in the National Veterans, and the realization by myself that tournament tennis, with its stock names and gestures, is but a small part of tennis in Washington, and greatly overemphasized. With this in mind, this column hopes to make more of an appeal in the future to that vast legion who play once a week, and are afflicted with abominable backhands.

This is the time of the year when sporting goods houses begin to make next year's tennis racquets and the advertising sections begin to look around for pregnant phrases which will convey to the mind of a potential buying public that the Whizzerino Special, 1933 model, is absolutely foolproof, breakproof and back-hand flubproof.

Next year Bill Shreve and Cy McDonald tell me, the racquet manufacturers are going to stress warp-proof racquets. They admit they made a mistake this year on a very popular brand of racquet by pasting a seamless piece of wood over the several sections which made up the throat. Next year they have a different idea—and a different paint job, but no reduction in price.

Bermuda Climate Best For Warping.

Speaking of warping, some of the greatest warping jobs ever created are accomplished by the Bermuda atmosphere. Players on that water-locked paradise all use presses and then cover the whole business with a rubber hood, after playing. You can take a real tightly strung racquet out of a moisture-proof case in Bermuda, hold it up in the air and almost see it wilt.

Michigan State Wins Over Detroit by 7-0

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 19 (U.P.). Michigan State College smashed a 9-year jinx today by defeating University of Detroit, 7 to 0. State scored the only tally of the game in the first period. The Spartans threatened to repeat on two other occasions.

Monnett passed to McNutt, who was downed on Detroit's 33-yard line and on the next play McNutt raced around his left end for the touchdown. Monnett converted from placement. Detroit filled the air with long passes from Nott, but his direction was poor. Nott's punting, however, excelled that of Eliowitz. Detroit was unable to solve the spinneer plays that sent McNutt and Eliowitz crashing through the line for long gains.

POPPELMAN IS HERO IN MARYLAND'S WIN

Several scoring opportunities were lost to the Generals, one of them in the initial period when three first downs were chalked up in a row. After carrying to the 15-yard stripe, the attack bogged down and the Old Liners gained possession and punted out of danger.

Again in the second period, after Maryland had scored, the Generals broke through to block Nelson's kick on the 25-yard line, but the half ended before the Generals could get going.

Neither team threatened seriously in the third, but in the fourth stanza the Generals started an attack on their own 30-yard line that carried to the opposition 20, with a pass to Todd, the chief ground-gainer. Here the Old Liners charged in fiercely to stop Sawyers at the line of scrimmage, knock down a pass and then on two occasions broke through to tackle Mattox as he was preparing to hurl an aerial.

Although the muddy field made fumbles frequent, both teams recovered on most occasions.

Eight First Downs To Foes' Seven.

Washington and Lee made eight first downs to seven for the visitors, but the ability of Poppleman to tear off yardage at the crucial moment gave the Old Liners their victory margin.

Bolen was outstanding in the Generals' defensive play.

Nelson's punting was spectacular at times and pulled the Old Liners out of several embarrassing situations. His boot in the second period that backed the Generals against the wall was a big factor. In the fourth quarter with the Generals trying desperately to push across a tying touchdown, the Old Liners punted repeatedly, taking no chances of fumbling the slippery pigskin.

The Maryland defensive, although somewhat leaky in midfield, tightened when the Generals reached the danger margin, and with Nelson's fine kicking held back the determined Washington and Lee attack.

The game ended with the Generals tossing passes about the field in a last-minute effort to score.

Touchdown—Poppleman.

TEMPLE LOSS MARS GOOD SEASON

Villanova 7-0 Victor in Mud and Rain at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Temple's undefeated record was smeared in the mud and rain at Temple Stadium today as the Villanova Wildcats pushed over a touchdown in the third period to register a 7-to-0 win.

Villanova dominated the contest almost throughout, and at the final gun was clawing at the Owls' goal line for what looked like another score.

The touchdown was made as the result of the outstanding play of the game. Receiving a punt at midfield, Whitey Pandour, Villanova's ball-carrying flash, gripped the mudcovered pigskin, splashed over to the right sideline, and tore down field to the Owls' 16.

In stopping the blond speedster, a Temple tackler gripped him out of bounds, and the Owls were penalized 15 yards—backed to their 1-yard stripe. Two line bucks failed, and on third try Harry Patzsch, sophomore full back, hit the center of the line for the score. Bernard Lee was rushed into the contest at this point and converted the try with an accurate place kick.

The game started in a driving downpour of rain, with only 2,500 soaked fans in the stands. As the second quarter got under way, however, the clouds blew over and the crowd had increased to 8,000 by the time the final whistle blew.

Desperate Aerial Attack Fails.

As the final period got under way the Owls took to the air in a desperate attempt to score. They drove 60 yards down field and seemed headed for an almost certain touchdown when the Wildcats stiffened in the pool-soaked gridiron and took the pigskin on downs. At this point, Villanova, for one of the few times this season, opened with a line-driving offensive, which carried relentlessly down field and was stopped on the Owls' 3-yard mark when the game ended.

Surprisingly, Temple scored more first downs than the Wildcats, chalking up five against Villanova's three. The Wildcats, however, ran the ball 122 yards from scrimmage, against 109 for Temple.

The game, the ninth in the series between the two schools, gave Villanova a five-to-three margin in the victories, with one contest a deadlock. All of the contests have been played in bad weather, and today's wind and downpour was easily the worst.

Lafayette Wins, 26-6, Over Lehigh in Rain

Easton, Pa., Nov. 19 (U.P.).—Long runs resulting in touchdowns featured Lafayette's 26-to-6 victory over Lehigh before 8,000 fans, who remained in their seats despite a heavy downpour of rain.

Lehigh scored its tally in the second period when Wildman broke through to block a kick on Lafayette's 13-yard line. Short carried the ball over on the next play.

Stabley sent Lehigh ahead in the opening period when he raced 60 yards to a touchdown. In the final period Foxx broke loose and ran 52 yards for another score. Bialek scored twice in the first and third periods and kicked 1 point.

Rutgers Team Victor Over Springfield, 18-0

Springfield, Mass., Nov. 19 (U.P.).—Rutgers defeated Springfield, 18 to 0, today in a driving rain. The blocked kicks were converted into touchdowns by the Scarlet in the second period and in the third session a twisting, dashing run of 30 yards by Truex, netted a third for the Rutgers Team.

Truex also tallied in the third period, with Prisco making the other score. Springfield threatened only once, in the first period, when a drive of 47 yards was halted on the 3-yard line, where Rutgers took the ball on downs.

GALLAUDET'S GRIDMEN EASY

Shepherd Eleven Has Little Opposition in 40-0 Win.

By LEWIS F. ATCHISON.

SHEPHERD COLLEGE'S RAMS proved better mudders than Gallaudet yesterday and as a result had little difficulty in rolling up 40 points to none for the home team in a dull game played at Kendall Green. It was the final contest of the season for both.

Playing in ankle-deep mud, the Rams splashed up and down the field driving Gallaudet before them in an unending parade of marches to the goal-line. It was difficult, almost impossible, to identify players soon after the fray opened, so thick was the mud that covered them from head to foot.

Blue Forward Wall Crumples.

Shepherd leveled its heavy artillery at the weak Blue wall at the start and fired away with devastating results. The Mountaineers crossed their opponents' goal line twice in the first period and as many times again in the second, assuming a lead that the locals could not hope to overcome.

Joe Cassell, a snake-hipped half back, who did not find the mud particularly bothersome, tallied twice, and Hunter Maddex and Stevens accounted for the others. Gallaudet men could have stopped numerous Shephert gains had they tackled better. The Blues attempted to dump the ball carrier by a thrust of the body rather than attempt to make a tackle.

Wendy Mathias, the little fellow who caused American U. so much trouble a few weeks ago, took up the scoring burden in the final half and succeeded in adding two touchdowns to his team's total. Mathias squirmed through knot holes in the line, twisted out of Gallaudet players' arms and skidded down the field for numerous long gains.

Gallaudet Fails To Threaten.

Gallaudet failed to threaten the Ram goal line. Shepherd outsmarted the local eleven by kicking on the first down, gaining many valuable yards on the subsequent return kick.

Lafayette Winner Over Lehigh, 25-6

8,000 See Maroons Take Their 40th Victory in Traditional Series.

Easton, Pa., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Lafayette's football warriors proved the better mudhorses today as they splashed and skidded to a 25-to-6 victory over Lehigh in the sixty-sixth gridiron meeting of the two universities.

On a field covered with pools and inches deep in mud, the Maroons registered two touchdowns in the opening period, and one each in the last two quarters. Lehigh converted its only scoring chance into a 6-pointer in the second quarter.

Only 8,000 spectators braved the elements to see Lafayette score its fortieth win in the traditional series. Lehigh has registered triumphs 24 times, and two contests ended in deadlocks.

A NEW national golf star is about to shoot across the horizon. He is Al Houghton, Kenwood's versatile pro, who is blazing a trail that may lead him to recognition as one of America's premier players. A consistent winner in money tournaments around this section for the past three months, Houghton scored the most notable triumph of his professional career this past week, when he tied for top honors with Al Watrous, veteran Detroit campaigner, and Henry Picard, Charleston, S. C., youth, in the Mid-South open championship at Pinehurst, N. C.

The mere fact that Houghton finished the 36-hole grind in front of such seasoned performers as the dean of the links, Walter Hagen; Johnny Farrell, Willie MacFarlane, Willie Klein, Tommy Armour and Billy Burke is a feat in itself. He was three strokes ahead of Horton Smith, recent winner of the National Capital Open at Houghton's home course, and for the second time within a week led the mers upon the only golfer in the field to make a birdie three on the starting hole at Kenwood. Long considered one of the toughest first holes in the Middle Atlantic section, No. 1 stumped the best in the flock of strong money players, some of whom took as high as six.

Scores Birdie Three on First Hole.

It is a par four, measuring 458 yards, and swings uphill. Two long wooden shots are required.

After making his par by dint of a brilliant recovery the first round, the Joplin Ghost took a five on the hole Sunday morning. In the afternoon, which saw him crash through with a par-busting 69, Smith negotiated the initial hole in a birdie three. It was a beautiful drive; then a powerfully clouted brassie shot that rolled over to the top of the hill and dribbled within eight feet of the cup. Smith rammed in his putt.

The only other contestant to reach the green in two was the "Black Scot," Tommy Armour. Al Houghton admitted that he has scored only four birdies on No. 1. Visiting professionals declared it to be one of the toughest beginners they had ever seen.

"This is not a tough course to play if you're hitting your shots straight," Dave Thomson, slim little professional from Washington Golf and Country Club, said the other day as he looked through the window of his busy golf-shop, scanned the rolling hills before him, and pointed to some of the holes that caused golfers lots of trouble.

"You've got to be on your game and be able to hit your shots well if you want to get around this course in par 70," the diminutive Washington tutor stated.

"A slice or bad shot and you are penalized, and that goes not only for one hole, but for every one on the course."

Errors on Eighteenth Prove Costly.

On the eighteenth, which finds the green elevated, Thomson showed what the penalty would be if a golfer was short with his second, overplayed the green or smacked his shot to the right or left of the carpet.

The two par five holes, both dogleg, are not easy to tackle in par figures unless one's accurate with his shots. The fourth, 472 yards, and the fifteenth, 446 yards, are so arranged that three nice shots are required to get on. When Thompson was burning up the course a few months ago with a 66, he came to grief on the long fourth, he recalls. Here he had a bad second shot and it meant six strokes. Otherwise a par would have given him undisputed possession of the noncompetitive course mark, which he shares with Maurice McCarthy, Walker Cup star.

J. Munro Hunter, Washington's powerful driver, attracted considerable attention at the Kenwood club house when he came home with a fine 74, the best turned in by any of the local contestants for the first 18 holes. A better break on the greens and Hunter would have been a few shots lower. It was only the sixth time he had played golf in several months.

Hunter found time to renew acquaintances with his many professional friends during the two-day classic. He is a great admirer of Walter Hagen, and does not think there is any golfer in the world his equal. After a long talk with The Haig, Hunter indicated he hoped to bring him to Washington with several other top-notch professionals for an exhibition match next spring.

Hagen Does a Comeback In Second Round.

With respect to Hagen's showmanship and uncanniness in golf matches, Hunter recalled the time The Haig was playing an exhibition at Virginia Beach. On one of the short holes Hagen took a five. Several interested spectators doubted whether Hagen could birdie the hole, and it seems as though a bit of wagering was carried on. Hagen gritted his teeth when he came to the same hole in the afternoon round, and with loads of confidence, fired his tee shot within a few inches of the hole as the wide-eyed spectators saw their hopes crashed.

"I have seen him do most unbelievable things under fire," Hunter said.

"It seems as though every time Hagen applies himself to the particular hole, he gets his birdie, eagle, or par."

Hunter also recalled the P. G. A. finals of 1925, when Wild Bill Melhorn threw a flock of birdies at Hagen, and The Haig answered with eagles. Hagen won the championship, 6 and 5.

Hagen was not himself at Kenwood. He sliced his shots, missed a number of approaches, and was decidedly off form in putting. Still the big gallery raced madly over the fairways to glimpse him in action. He failed to finish in the money.

Yet, Hagen made some beautiful shots. On two holes of the first nine on Saturday he was denied sensational 40-foot putts by inches.

The Haig Is Directed To Hole.

In typical Hagen style, he showed up at the clubhouse 20 minutes before teeing off, swung his club a couple of times, and went out on the putting green. When Hagen appeared on the first tee he asked Horton Smith "How do you get to this hole?"

"Just up the way," Smith answered. He got there in five.

George Diffenbaugh, Indian Spring pro, confessed the other day that he was so cold when he got to the ninth hole of the first round at Kenwood that he didn't even take time to study his putt.

"I went up to the ball and smacked it without hardly looking at it," George said. "Naturally, I missed."

Barnett Praises Ball's Playing.

Bob Barnett, Chevy Chase's fiery-thatched pro, returned from Pinehurst Thursday with a word of praise for the brilliant playing of Errie Ball, Atlanta professional. Barnett was paired with Ball in the Midsouth and watched him burn up the course with a 69 in his morning round. He slumped in the afternoon for 75.

"Ball played perfect golf on the first eighteen except for one shot on the thirteenth," Barnett stated. "He hooked his drive, the only bad shot of one of the finest rounds I have ever seen. From tee to green his shots were perfect."

With the tournament over, members of the District of Columbia Women's Golf Association are looking forward with interest to the annual election and meeting on December 1 at Chevy Chase. Here Mrs. Frank B. Keefer will turn over the presidential reins after a successful three-year term.

The nominating committee already has selected Miss Elizabeth C. Harris, of Kenwood, well known along the feminine golfing front, as the new president. Other officers nominated and who will be voted on at the meeting are Mrs. Norman B. Frost, of Columbia, first vice president; Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, of Indian Spring, second vice president; Mrs. Sutton, of Washington, secretary, and Mrs. Alma Von Steinner, of Congressional, treasurer.

It remained for Mrs. John F. Gross, of Indian Spring, to win the grand finale tournament of the year, held over her home course this past Tuesday. She took possession of the Times Trophy, which will be contested for annually.

Velvet bent grass has been declared the best for putting greens by the Agriculture Department and a group of prominent professionals who participated in the tournament at Kenwood. Billy Burke, Johnny Farrell, Willie MacFarlane, Wiffy Cox, Horton Smith, Johnny Golden and Tom Kerrigan, after testing several types of grass during a visit to the experimental farm at Arlington, voted it the best for putting greens.

CENTRAL 20-0 VICTIM OF CHARLOTTE

Special to The Washington Post.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Nov. 19.—Overcoming a stubborn eleven from Central High School of Washington, D. C., the Charlotte High Wildcats repulsed the last invasion of their home gridiron with a 20-to-0 victory over the lads from the National Capital here today. The contest was played in bitter cold weather and on a rain-soaked gridiron before 2,000 shivering fans.

The Washington eleven offered only one serious threat when it opened the final quarter with a drive that took it to the locals' 4-yard mark. Frank Koscis, all-high guard this season and last and all-high full back in 1930, went from the line to full back for Central and started the drive with a 20-yard off-tackle sprint. In the shadow of the goal, the Capital boys were held for downs.

The long-distance punting of Capt. Henry Gibbons and the all-round work of Koscis featured for Washington, while Capt. Gadd led the locals' attack. Washington made two first downs to nine for Charlotte. There were many off-side penalties and fumbles.

G. W.-OKLAHOMA GAME THURSDAY HEADS WEEK'S CARD HERE

Big Six Team To Invade Capital

Conquerors of Tulsa Boast 2 Threats in Pansze Brothers.

G. U. Meets Carnegie Here on Saturday; Md. vs. Hopkins.

WEEK'S SCHEDULE.

THANKSGIVING.

Here—George Washington vs. Oklahoma, at Griffith Stadium.

SATURDAY.

Away—Maryland vs. Johns Hopkins, at Baltimore.

ONE of the strangest teams under the football sun—Oklahoma—makes its first visit to the East, and, of course, its first visit to Washington next Thursday afternoon to meet George Washington University's ambitious Colonials in a Turkey Day game that promises to be one of the football treats of the past decade.

George Washington will have an unobstructed slate that day, Catholic University having shifted its scheduled Thursday game with Loyola of Baltimore back to Saturday, at Brookland Stadium.

It will be the final games of the season for G. W., C. U., and the Hilltoppers. Maryland meets Johns Hopkins Saturday, at Baltimore, and Western Maryland the following week.

Oklahoma Won Over Tulsa.

Oklahoma, long a power in the Big Six of the Southwest, comes to Washington with an assortment of plays and players that—coupled with the Thanksgiving holiday—promises to produce a football event. The big power squad, nicknamed the Sooners (because they'd just as Sooner play Notre Dame as Slippery Rock) has had another good season, beating Tulsa, 7-0; Kansas, 21-6; Kansas State, 20-13, and Iowa State, 19-12. It lost upset games to Oklahoma A. and M., Missouri and was beaten by Texas, 17-10, while playing without the services of its greatest back—Bill Pansze. Yesterday the Sooners held the great Nebraska team to a 5-0 score.

The Pansze boys, Bill and Art, are twin triple threats. They only weigh 155 and 165 respectively—small for competition in that sector of the country—but they rank with the best. The remainder of the first string back field is Bob Dunlap, 185-pound quarter back, and Jim Stacy, 200-pound 6-foot-3 full back. The Sooners have a veteran line, dominated by Paul Young, 6-foot-4 center, who was All Big Six last year and gained All-American mention. The second team is heavier than the first.

Play Football In Shorts.

Oklahoma plays football in shorts, knee protectors. They are coached by Lewie Hardage, for years at Vanderbilt.

Catholic University has a splendid chance to run out its season with a victory over Loyola, but Georgetown's, which has been as tame as a courthouse pigeon all year, has not much of a chance against the ferocious Carnegie Tech gridmen.

Maryland should ride over Johns Hopkins Saturday at Baltimore, for the Blue Jays have proved rather lukewarm all year.

Maryland and C. U., however, will more or less have their hands full. Johns Hopkins and Loyola are a couple of old-time rivals of the local schools and despite their season's records they always manage to put up a good battle against the local schools.

Georgetown's next game is with Carnegie Tech here on December 3.

ROCHESTER IS DEFEATED.

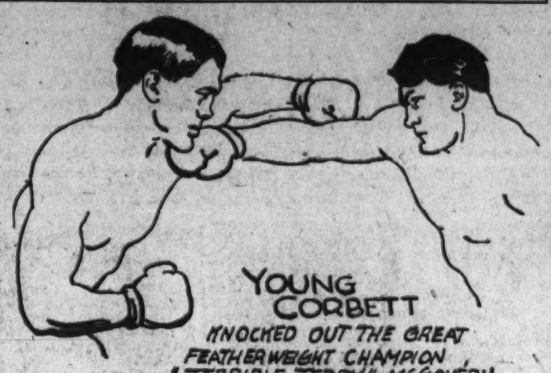
Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Wesleyan University punched out its seventh victory in eight games here today at the expense of the University of Rochester Yellow Jackets, 13 to 0.

Capt. Larry Schlums, with runs of 50 and 25 yards, put the Cardinals in scoring positions in the first and third periods and got the touchdowns each time.

CREIGHTON WINS, 34-0.

Omaha, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Scoring in every quarter and adding emphasis with two touchdowns in the last period, Creighton University's football team ended its season with a 34-to-0 victory over Wyoming University today. Howdy Gordon, plunging right half back, accounted for three touchdowns as the Omahans swept over the Cowboys with orthodox line play and end sweeps.

NEAR-CHAMPS IN MANY A THRILLING BOUT —By Robert Edgren



Billy Petrolle Joins Clan Of Great Near-Champions

By ROBERT EDGREN.

WHEN Billy Petrolle, the famous Fargo Express, was battered helpless by Lightweight Champion Tony Canzoneri he joined the list of really great fighters who never held a title.

Petrolle has beaten a lot of "title contenders," but he has been content to go along making money with frequent fights against the best men who could be found to meet him, and letting title holders go their way.

The Fargo Express hasn't ducked matches with the toughest of them, and any 135-140 pounders who can stop men like McLarnin, King Tut and Battalino is a fighter. He has plenty of skill, plenty of fighting spirit, and a punch that is likely to knock out any man he lands it on.

Petrolle's Chance Seems to Have Slipped by.

But unless he fights at his natural weight and is lucky enough to get a match with the welter champion his chance to wind up a very active career as a champion seems to have slipped by. It isn't likely he'd do any better if Canzoneri gave him another bout. Canzoneri is the best fighting lightweight since Benny Leonard was king. Many class him with Benny.

There were famous near-champions in the old days who never quite touched a title. There was Tom Sharkey, who made his greatest bid in a desperate 25 rounds against Jim Jefferies, lost a close decision and took a battering that ended all chance of his ever becoming champion.

Young Corbett was great in his day one of the hardest hitters of his weight ever seen in a ring, and as cool and crafty a fighter as I ever looked at. Terry McGovern was the invincible featherweight champion and had beaten down all opposition when Sam Harris heard of Young Corbett's success in Denver and the Middle West, and sent for him to fight Terry at Hartford Thanksgiving, July in 1901. That fight stands out in my recollection as one of the three greatest thrillers I've ever seen.

McGovern Perfect Type of Furious Fighters.

Terrible Terry was the perfect type of the furious, headlong fighting man. Corbett was hardly given a chance against him. A couple of weeks before the fight I visited Young Corbett at his training quarters in New Haven. At lunch in Heublein's Corbett remarked calmly: "We're both from the West and I'm going to give you a good tip. Put every dollar you can raise on me to knock McGovern out. It's an absolute cinch."

I almost felt sorry for this confident kid from Denver. He was due for such a disappointment—good as he was. But that afternoon, as he was about to put on the gloves with Iron Man Charlie Sieger, of Hoboken, he walked around to me and said: "Sieger has never even been on the floor. I'll knock him out and show you what I'll do to Terry." In Sieger's first rush Corbett calmly whipped a right hand to his chin and knocked him cold.

Spectators Could Not Believe Terry Was Out.

And that's what he did to Terry in the second round, crossing a right inside of Terry's left hook as Terry rushed furiously, knocking Terry down so hard his head bounced up and down on the padded floor. Terry was counted out and was still out when they carried him to his corner. The amazed spectators couldn't believe their eyes.

The featherweight limit then was 122 pounds, and the fight was at 126, if I remember right. It wasn't for the championship, and Young Corbett couldn't have made 122 pounds then or at any later time. His manager, Harry Pollock, naturally "claimed the title" and advertised Corbett as feather champion. But Young Corbett said modestly, when I asked his view of it: "I'm not featherweight champion but I'll be known as the man who knocked out Terry McGovern. That's good enough." Later Corbett fought the best lightweights. He was the Billy Petrolle of that day, willing to fight anybody.

Corbett Broke Three of Nelson's Ribs.

When Battling Nelson claimed the title, "white lightweight champion," Corbett fought him twice. In the first fight Corbett broke three of Nelson's ribs, but the tough Dane wore him down and knocked him out in 10 rounds. In a second fight Nelson knocked Young Corbett out in nine, and that was practically Corbett's finish as a fighter. Nelson went on and not long afterward knocked out Joe Gans and became lightweight champion with no color line drawn.

Eddie Hanlon, of San Francisco, was another near-champion who held no titles. When only 16 he fought a 20-round draw with Young Corbett, nearly knocking Corbett out in the eighteenth. Eddie fought a 20-round draw with Abe Attell just before that. Attell was claiming the featherweight title, McGovern having retired, and afterward made his claim good. He was knocked out in 19 rounds by Battling Nelson, after a savage and even fight. They started Hanlon too young and burned him out, or he might have been feather and light weight champion, and one of those they call "greatest of all time."

Luis Firpo, of the Argentine, knocked Jack Dempsey to the floor three times and once knocked the heavyweight champion out of the ring. He was knocking at the door of the world's heavyweight championship, but in the second round Dempsey knocked him out. Nearly a champion, but not quite, Firpo went home for a long vacation, grew fat and bothered Dempsey no more.

Willie Lewis fought Honey Mellody, welter champion, and was knocked out. Lewis went to France, knocked out most of the European heavyweights, came back, fought middleweight champion, Stanley Ketchel, and was knocked out in the second round. Prettiest thing you ever saw! Ketchel knew Lewis had a dangerous wallop, came in with a shifting attack, swaying from side to side and bobbing up and down. Willie, cautious, backed to the ropes, covering his chin with upraised forearms, peering at Ketchel between his gloves. Ketchel, laughing as if at his inability to find an opening, stopped swaying, half dropped his hands and seemed to be about to step away. Lewis pulled his hand back a few inches to shoot his deadly right at Ketchel's wide open chin, and crack! Ketchel's gloved fist went through that small opening like a bullet and Willie dropped. Lewis was a knockout artist, but he missed the titles.

Tulane Reserves Trample Sewanee

New Orleans, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Using reserves during most of the game, Tulane's Green Wave rolled over a fighting Sewanee Tiger here today to win, 26 to 0, before about 7,000 spectators.

Tulane's reserves scored two touchdowns in the second period and the varsity scored twice in the final quarter. The work of the Greenie reserves furnished the spectacular features of the game. Hodgins, reserve half back, broke loose to score the first touchdown, shaking off three tacklers in a 68-yard run, and Schroeder, left guard, intercepted a Sewanee pass to race 57 yards for the second touchdown.

The Tulane varsity went in late in the game to pile up a secure margin with two scoring marches down the field. Loftin, full back, plunged over for one touchdown, and Don Zimmerman, flying half back, skirted left end for the second.

PITT IS HELD TO 6-0 WIN IN SNOW

Carnegie Tech Barely Nosed Out; 15,000 See Contest.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Pitt's Panthers took another game from Carnegie Tech today, 6 to 0, before a crowd estimated at 15,000, who braved rain, snow and cold to see the nineteenth annual contest.

Although the Panthers outplayed the Scots throughout, it was the big break of a day of breaks that gave them the lone touchdown and their fifteenth triumph in the nineteen meetings with the Plaid.

Harvey Rooker, sophomore end, sped down the field under one of Quarter Back Miller Munjas' long punts in the third period, and when Dueger, Skibo safety man, fumbled the ball, the Pitt end pounced on it on Tech's 4-yard line.

Carnegie Best on Defense.

The Scots played best on the defensive and managed to hold the ever-threatening Pitt running game when the Panthers approached the goal, and except for Dueger's fumble, might have added another scoreless tie to the Panthers' record.

Pitt piled up 11 first downs to 3 for Carnegie, gained 214 yards from scrimmage to 76 for the Tartans, intercepted three of Carnegie's dangerous passes and outpunted their opponents by an average of ten yards.

The victory carried with it the city championship, as the Cats already had taken the measure of Duquesne.

Quarter Backs Miller Munjas and Bob Hogan, of the Panthers, were the stars. Both kicked beautifully, and so well were the boots covered by the ends and by the veteran center, Joe Tormey, that the Skibos were kept helpless within their own territory just when it seemed most probable that they could move.

The Plaid tempted fate by starting a team composed more or less of reserves. This squad missed a big break at the beginning of the game and was pushed steadily down the field by the hard-working Panthers, and finally the Tech varsity line was rushed in to prevent what looked like a certain score.

The big chance that Tech muffed came during the first three minutes of play. Tech received the kick off, Co-Capt. George Gavel making a return of 51 yards to Pitt's 47-yard line. The Tartan attack bogged down, however, and Tay Tesser had to drop back from his position at left end and punt.

Carnegie Threat Is Killed.

The ball was grounded on Pitt's 10 and on the third play from scrimmage, the usually steady Heller fumbled the slippery ball and Tesser recovered on Pitt's 12-yard line.

A thousand Tartan throats roared for the touchdown and as many Panther backers sighed, but the Pitt line smashed through to stop Kavel and Dueger on their attempted end runs. Then O'Toole's pass sailed harmlessly over the goal line.

Postseason Contest Vetoed by Vanderbilt

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Vanderbilt University committee on athletics at a meeting today voted unanimously against accepting any invitation for the Vanderbilt football team to play a postseason game.

Dr. L. C. Glenn, chairman of the committee, said tonight the decision was based on the fact that the university's first term ends in December and a postseason game might handicap the players in the term examinations.

Vanderbilt athletic officials had been asked their attitude toward playing an unnamed opponent in New York in a charity game.

KENTUCKY TEACHERS WIN.

Bowling Green, Ky., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Western Kentucky Teachers College strengthened its claim to the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association championship today by easily defeating the University of Louisville, 58 to 0.

STAGG TEAM CRUSHED BY WISCONSIN

Loses, 18 to 7, After 7-6 Lead Before 20,000 Crowd.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Amos Alonzo Stagg ended his record-breaking football run today, but there was no story-book finish.

Huddled on the players' bench as head football coach for the last official time at the University of Chicago, he watched his forty-first and final Maroon team routed by the bristling Badgers from Wisconsin by a two-touchdown margin. The final score was Wisconsin, 18; Chicago, 7.

For a few minutes early in the second period, it looked as if Stagg's curtain call of football would be crowned with one of the outstanding upset victories of the season. His Maroons, badly outcharged on the right side of the line, had come back from almost nowhere to take a 7 to 3 lead and the loyal crowd of 20,000, shivering as the icy blasts swept the field, arose and cheered. The Badgers rushed back, scored another touchdown for a five-point lead at half time and then added another by clean superiority to clinch the victory.

Maroons Badly Outplayed.

Wisconsin outplayed the Maroons in every department except courage, rolling up 210 yards from scrimmage to 79 for the Staggian forces, and piling up a first-down advantage of 15 to 6. Three Badgers participated in the scoring after long marches by Strain, Kabat and Smith, while the single Maroon tally was made by Sahlin.

One thrill was given Coach Stagg and the crowd in the final period. Catching a punt on his 36-yard line, Zimmer ran through the entire Badger team. As he passed the Badger 30-yard line, it looked like an easy score with no one ahead of him. But two yards later, he stumbled. With that fall went Stagg's last chance of victory.

Hall, lanky Bobcat quarter back, and Buckler, reserve Army half, waged a brilliant duel of punts all through the game, Buckler getting off one kick that sent the soggy ball soaring 60 yards on the fly to roll dead on Wesleyan's 10-yard line.

The regulars, going in to start the second half, were not long in scoring. Stopped once on the Bobcat's 38-yard line when Ken Fields fumbled and shortly thereafter set back to their own 25 by a 25-yard penalty for unnecessary roughness, they sent Vidal from there on his scoring dash.

Vidal Untouched in Dash To Touchdown.

Fields flipped a lateral to the little swivel-hipped Army back and "Pick" started goalward. A wave of Wesleyan tacklers closed in on him at midfield, but he sidestepped the first two, slowed up to let his interference form and then cut back as his fellow players cut the opposition down to run untouched to the goal.

Their work done, the regulars retired to watch the second and third string players hold safely to the lead.

Wesleyan made only one real scoring threat early in the fourth quarter when they recovered a fumble on Army's 38-yard line. A pass was declared completed for interference on the Cadets' 25 and another short pass, Hall to Rine, Bobcat end, took the ball to Army's 16. Two line plunges failed, two passes were knocked down and the ball game was practically over.

HOLY CROSS TEAM HELD TO 0-0 TIE

NEW YORK, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Manhattan College waged a battle in the mud against Holy Cross and held the Crusaders to a scoreless tie in the first meeting in the football history of these institutions at Yankee Stadium today.

For the New Yorkers, who stood off the highly regarded Worcester machine in the very first period with a stand on their 2-yard line, the result of the contest was a success. The Manhattan rooters carried off the goal posts when the game was over.

Holy Cross' running attack failed when the mud, combined with scrappy defensive work by Manhattan's line, halted the purple ball-carriers in their tracks.

Manhattan never penetrated into the visitors' territory.

A fumble early in the first period gave Holy Cross its first chance. Ciard fumbled a pass from center and Moran recovered for Holy Cross on the Green's 21-yard mark. Clifford made a first down on the 11, but, with a yard to go for first down and two for a touchdown, Manhattan held on tries by Clifford and O'Connor and took the ball on downs.

Held for Downs By Enemy.

On four other occasions Holy Cross yielded the ball on downs when two first downs would have put the Purple in advantageous positions. The visitors were halted on the Manhattan 18-yard line in the second period, on the Green 27-yard mark in the third, and on the New Yorker's 31-yard line and 19-yard line in the last quarter.

The farthest past midfield Manhattan got was the Holy Cross 37-yard stripe, late in the fourth quarter, after Moyer had blocked Jack O'Connor's kick and recovered on the Crusader's 41-yard line. Holy Cross made eight first downs to Manhattan's four. Neither team was able to complete a forward pass.

YALE USES PASSES TO DEFEAT HARVARD

The second period opened with the Yale side of the bowl chanting that most solemn of all dirges, "The Undertakers' Song," and Harvard, as though inflamed by the implication that it was ready for burial, struck back. Crickard took Parker's poor punt and returned it to Yale's 38-yard stripe. Wells then whipped through the middle to the 23-yard line, but the drive ended there. A few minutes later, Crickard, single-handed, again placed Harvard in scoring position. Taking Parker's punt in midfield, Jack wiggled his way to Yale's 16-yard line before Lassiter nailed him from behind. Two plays later Crickard turned right end to the 5-yard line.

"Undertaker's Song" Stirs Harvard.

And again the attack bogged down, the inspired Yale line yielding but one yard in four shots. That ended Harvard. From that point on the power was gone from its attack, the fire from its defense.

Yale swung into the attack soon after the second half kick-off. The Blue team marched 55 yards in six plays for a touchdown. Lassiter, the high striding, swivel-hipped North Carolinian, started the push when he streaked around right end for 18 yards and a first down on Harvard's 40-yard stripe.

He kept it going by splitting the Harvard middie for 12 yards more. Two more plunges, one by Crowley, one by Lassiter, put the ball on the 16-yard line. Lassiter, behind magnificent interference, breezed around Nazro's end to the 2-yard mark. The ball was then given to Levering, and that dependable young man punched it across. Curtin's try for the extra point failed.

Yale paved the way for its third and final touchdown late in the third period when a Harvard lateral went haywire and was recovered by Garnsey, substitute end, on the Crimson's 25-yard stripe. Two drives at the line yielding nothing, Lassiter dropped back and shot a pass that Parker took over his shoulder as he crossed the goal line. Mac Williamson dropped back to drop-kick the extra point, but never got a chance as a bad pass from center forced him to dive on the ball.

Yale Subs Within Ace Of Scoring.

Yale, with almost an entire substitute team, came within an ace of scoring again when Williamson returned Crickard's partially blocked punt to Harvard's 6-yard line. This drive was thwarted, however, when Williamson fumbled and Capt. Carl Hagerman recovered for Harvard.

The game ended a few moments later with Harvard throwing the ball all over the field in a frantic scoring attempt.

GONZAGA VICTORIOUS.

Spokane, Wash., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—A stalwart and stubborn South Dakota line stood up before a ripping, slashing offense for three periods before crumbling to let Gonzaga's Bulldogs score a 12-to-0 victory in their football game here today.

Until the last period Gonzaga was unable to advance to within scoring distance through the powerful Dakota line, although the Bulldogs piled up eight first downs in the three periods in marches across midfield that petered out as they neared the goal.

COLUMBIA IN 0-0 TIE WITH SYRACUSE

Lions Hold Big Edge But Are Unable to Score.

By GALE TALBOT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Pushed back almost to its goal line in every period and roundly outplayed in every particular, Syracuse rallied in the pinches today to hold the Columbia Lions and Cliff Montgomery to a scoreless draw in a game played throughout in a driving rain.

Only about 4,000 fans huddled in Baker Bowl while the two elevens splattered up and down a field ankle deep in ooze. It was raining when they started and raining when they finished.

Considering the conditions, Columbia did very well. From start to finish, the Lions barged toward the Syracuse goal, going inside the Orange 20-yard line five times and once reaching the 5, but each time the elements and a scrapping Syracuse line conspired to slap them back.

Syracuse Relies Chiefly On Hope.

The Syracuse eleven, on the other hand, was able to do little but hope and hold on tight. Never able to gain, the Orange just punted and protected its goal posts. Only once did it get possession of the ball past midfield, and on that occasion it lost 15 yards before it could turn loose of the sodden pellet.

With Montgomery and Brominski alternating in thrusts at the line and wings, Columbia was able to stack up ten first downs and a total gain of 168 yards. Syracuse made only one first down, that on a major penalty, and had a deficit of 10 yards to show for its offensive efforts. Columbia completed the only two passes of the game, picking up 7 yards therefrom.

Only the steady punting of Nick Dinunzio, Syracuse quarter back, enabled the Orange to emerge with a tie. All afternoon, it seemed, he was standing on or behind his goal line, juggling the slippery ball a moment and then booting it out toward midfield.

GEORGETOWN HOLDS BUCKNELL TO TIE

tell his rhythm was gone. His leg swung, and several thousand Hilltop hearts missed a beat.

Suddenly a big lump of mud—Hudson—rose before him. The lump jumped and a hand protruded from it. It just tipped the ball, but it slowed it down and the sodden ball dropped 6 feet short of its mark. A fighting Georgetown team, starved of victory for five straight games, had pulled itself up by its bootstraps and halted a tailspin into the ranks of the football nobodies.

Bucknell Score Dampens G. U. Spirit.

Bucknell's last-quarter touchdown dampened, but did not totally extinguish the thrilling spectacle of a Georgetown team, thoroughly aroused, which had forged to a 6-0 lead early in the third quarter—and threatened to hold the desperate and favored Bucknell Bisons scoreless.

Georgetown scored (its first tally since the first quarter of the Western Maryland game on October 22) on the second play of the third quarter. Danner had kicked off, and it was Bucknell's ball on the 15-yard line. Joe Rhubright decided to kick, but as his big foot came around to connect with the ball, Hudson caromed in from his end and spread his arms and legs like a flying squirrel. The ball struck his chest and slithered to the 7-yard line. Wilmer Bradley, rushing straight for the ball, scooped it up out of a pool of water, took two stumbling steps and fell in a mud-spraying splash across the line.

In a flash Bucknell had countered a return thrust. A bad kick by Shimmens, heartily excusable with a ball that resembled a hand of quicksilver, rolled out on Georgetown's 25-yard line. Pug Reznichak chucked a two-handed short pass to Zanarina, who received the ball in a cloud of Georgetown players and struggled to the 2-yard line where Tommy Carolan tackled him. Then the mud of the Georgetown line turned to some harder substances. Three shattering bucks by Reznichak were themselves shattered, and the healthy scoring threat came to a dismal end when Nick Viskovitch deflected Reznichak's pass over the line to Myers.

G. U. Fumble Recovered By Bucknell.

After a late third quarter drive by Bucknell had bogged down within 20 yards of the Hoya goal, the Bisons, continuing their steady kicking game—even in the face of three Georgetown blocks—found success at last, within reaching distance of the end of the game, when Verhey kicked well to Georgetown's 15-yard line. Verhey broke through the tiring Hoya line and threw Bradley for a 5-yard loss.

Johnny Shimmens, who had played a good game all day, could not handle a pass from center and muffed the ball. Frenzied hands clutched at the ball, and when the officials finally undid the tangle the man on the bottom was Eddie Myers, and the ball was imbedded in the 7-yard line.

On the second play, Reznichak passed to Eddie Myers, on the goal line, directly through the arms of two Georgetown secondaries.

Many Latin Envoys Here Come to be Presidents

So Washington Now Is Entertaining Senora de Sacasa, Wife of Chief-Elect of Nicaragua—Young People Week Begins—Sewing for Charity.

WASHINGTON, so like other capital cities in many ways, is rather unique in having known such a number of Presidents of neighboring republics and having known them well; even counted them among her very closest friends. Representatives of foreign countries, who have lived here calmly as diplomatic representatives, are hastily snatched away to assume the duties of chief executive of their native lands, and most frequent among these are our neighbors from Latin America. Last week Capital society has been busy entertaining Senora de Sacasa, for several years one of the popular diplomatic hostesses of Washington, during the time her husband, Senor Don Juan B. Sacasa was Minister of Nicaragua. For the past few months Senora de Sacasa has been here in an unofficial capacity, owing to Senor Sacasa's resignation and his subsequent departure for Central America, where he recently won the election for president.

Now Senora de Sacasa, who with her two charming daughters, Senorita Maria and Senorita Gloria, will leave November 28 for New York to sail December 8 for Nicaragua, find their days and evenings occupied with luncheons, teas, dinners and dances.

This afternoon the Military Attache of the Cuban Embassy and Senora de Prieto will entertain at a large reception in honor of Senora de Sacasa in their home on Massachusetts avenue, and tomorrow Mrs. Russell-Bennett will entertain at a small tea for the wife of the President-elect of Nicaragua.

Other familiar figures in Washington who have responded to the demands of their country are the Minister of Panama, Senor Dr. Ricardo Alfaro, who until a month ago was president of that country and only on election of Senor Dr. Harmodio Arias, also one-time Minister to Washington, has Dr. Alfaro returned to the Capital, where he has resumed his diplomatic duties. Senor Arias succeeded Dr. Alfaro as Minister to Washington when the latter was called to Panama suddenly by the demands of his country. Senor Arias served only a short time here and then returned to his home where he entered the presidential race. Dr. Alfaro's brother, Senor Horatio Alfaro, served as minister until the expiration of his brother's term as president.

The former Minister of Colombia, Senor Dr. Enrique Olaya de Herrera, was elected president of his country a number of years ago, and has since then served in the office with great ability. The former Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Carlos Davila, also served a brief term in the high office of his country, but political disturbances have caused his departure from Chile and, with his family, he is now in New York.

Even the President-elect of Brazil, Dr. Julio Prestes, paid a visit to Washington shortly after his election, and though he was never inaugurated, is numbered among the presidents who have visited this country. The Brazilian Ambassador of that time, Senhor S. Gurgel do Amaral, it will be remembered, gave one of the most brilliant dinners Washington has ever seen in the Pan-American Union during Dr. Prestes' visit, at which the President and Mrs. Hoover, who had met Dr. Prestes on their trip to South America, were the guests of honor.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Harvey Wattles, who recently returned to their home on Crescent place after spending several months in La Jolla, Calif., bring with them glamorous tales of the Spanish fiesta, which they attended just before leaving for the East. The delights of a Spanish fiesta in the lovely "jewel town" of southern California—La Jolla—seem to have left a deep impression as might be imagined from the descriptions of broad terraces of the Casa de Manna, on a cliff overlooking the ocean and sweeping expanse of beach. Spanish, Mexican and Hawaiian dances, music and songs, all in a setting so nearly like their native climates, added brilliancy to the gay crowds who attended. Most of the audience were costumes suitable for the occasion, many wearing antinque laces and brocades of great splendor.

Many of the costumes were heirlooms of California families, some showing the Spanish influence, and others handed down by the colonists and settlers from Eastern parts of this country. The piece de resistance of the fete was the mock bull fight, staged with great correctness of de-

Bids to Bachelors' Cotillions Eagerly Awaited by Society

Much speculation is being manifested in Washington social circles as to the identity of the "chosen few" who have received invitations to the Washington Bachelors' Cotillions this year. Horton, U. S. A., president of the "bachelors." The names of the ladies from diplomatic, Cabinet, congressional and residential circles who will form the receiving line that evening will also be published at an early date.

Coast Artillery Chief Is Guest At Old Point

Maj. Gen. John W. Gulick, chief of the Coast Artillery, and Mrs. Gulick, of Washington, spent the last week-end at Fort Monroe, Old Point, as the guests of Brig. Gen. Joseph Powell Tracy, the commanding officer, and Mrs. Tracy, having gone there to attend a program of social events given in celebration of Armistice Day. Among those in their honor was a dinner dance at the Officers' Casemate Club given by Maj. and Mrs. Cedric M. S. Skene and also including Gen. and Mrs. Tracy; Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Robert E. Callam, also of Washington, who visited Col. and Mrs. Harold Cloke at the fort., over the week-end; Maj. and Mrs. Carl E. Hocker, Maj. and Mrs. Charles W. Bundy, Maj. and Mrs. Dale D. Hinman, Maj. and Mrs. Ira A. Crump, Capt. and Mrs. Francis L. Chrisman, Capt. and Mrs. John Taylor de Camp, Capt. and Mrs. Leonard L. Davis, Capt. and Mrs. Daniel W. Hickey, Capt. and Mrs. Stanley Michelson, Lieut. and Mrs. Ralph Russell, Lieut. and Mrs. Legare Tarrant, Lieut. and Mrs. August B. Schumacher, all of Fort Monroe; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Talbott, of the New Chamberlin; Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Kenyon, jr., and Mrs. Magruder and Mrs. W. F. Ayers, of Washington.

Col. Douglas Forrest Duval, in command of the Post Hospital at Fort Monroe, also entertained a number of guests at the dinner dance which was preceded by an aperitif party given by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Kenyon at their Virginia estate, Rossland Manor, near Phoebus, and earlier still by a tea in the sunroom of the Chamberlin Hotel, with music by the Medaford Trio, varied by character dancing by Carmen Kleinmann.

An interesting event of the current week at the New Chamberlin was a dinner given by a number of prominent women of Hampton and vicinity to celebrate the eighty-eighth birthday of John F. Hurley, for sixteen years Mayor of Salem, Mass.; member of the historic Silk Hat Club, of Boston, and now a member of the Veterans' Administrative Home at Hampton, Va. Incidentally, the dinner also celebrated the return to Mr. Hurley's head of the famous silk "topper" the invariable wear of which has caused him to be nationally renowned as "Silk Hat Hurley," and which he discarded four years ago when Virginia went Republican, declaring he would never again don it until the State of his adoption returned to the way of its political inheritance. For although New Englander by birth Mr. Hurley has always been a good Democrat and moreover, is the only mayor of that party that Salem has ever known. Now he is again wearing the significant "high hat," at the old Beau Brummel angle, and moreover did a few clog and jig steps in the intervals of dancing during the dinner, over the fact that not only his own two States of Virginia and Massachusetts, but pretty much all of the other States of the Union have joined the Democratic column. A reception in the palm room of the Chamberlin preceded the dinner which was served in a private dining room at one long table lavishly decorated with flowers and with a huge birthday cake providing the chief motif. On the souvenir menu cards were photographs of Mr. Hurley. Covers were laid for 40. Among those present were the Misses Anne and Dorothy Hurley and Mr. Paul D. Hurley, of Washington, nieces and nephew of the guest of honor, and Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Hurley, of St. Albans, Vt.

DETROIT CAR PLANTS ALIVE WITH ACTIVITY

Auto Makers Certain Trade Is Coming Back Busy With New Models.

Detroit, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—Automobile manufacturers, convinced there are buyers for their products, are rushing last-minute details on the cars they hope will dazzle the American public in 1933.

Detroit, lean from depression years, hums with more enthusiasm than in many months. Test models with dummy radiators dash along outlying roads, clocked by scouts of opposition companies. Intriguing new models are shown secretly, and to a favored few, behind locked doors. Factory gates are crowded again as some of the jobless are called back to work.

Walter P. Chrysler was the first to announce plans for the new year. His corporation is producings new Plymouth six models, while Dodge Brothers, a subsidiary, is reemploying 30,000 men to work part-time on a new Dodge six-cylinder line. A new De Soto will be announced in December.

General Motors, meanwhile, will introduce a new Chevrolet which, according to reports, will feature a longer wheelbase and radical changes in body design.

Ford Plans Mystery.

Thousands of workmen have been recalled at the Chevrolet plants to produce 50,000 units for distribution to dealers by January 1. The company has promised a price range in keeping with reduced incomes.

Henry Ford is, as usual the man of mystery in the industry. It is quite probable, however, that he will not make changes for the new year presentations. His present V-eights and fours have been on the market only five months.

Ford is building 2,500 cars a day, three days a week. He will keep most of his assembly lines operating the remainder of the year.

Unofficial sources reported that the Dearborn manufacturer will abandon production of four-cylinder cars, save only for trucks and concentrate on perfecting the V-eight.

Austin Motor Car Co. probably will be the only manufacturer to present a four-cylinder car. Renewed activity is reported at the Austin plants, Butler, Pa.

New Pontiac Model.

Willys-Overland, Hudson-Essex and Continental Automobiles Co., probably will introduce six-cylinder cars featuring radical changes in body design. Price reductions slightly under the present range are considered by all three companies.

Pontiac is building a new straight eight in the medium-priced field, Franklin is producing a new line to be called "the Olympic." Nash is manufacturing a new stream-lined model.

Graham-Paige engineers, like the Ford master mechanics, are reported concentrating on perfecting present models. Streamlining on the Graham-Paige already is well developed.

High-priced car manufacturers are making few changes. Packard, Cadillac, Lincoln and others—all will feature improved streamlining and high-compression motors.

How to Keep Well

By DR. W. A. EVANS

A SCORE CARD FOR CHILD TRAINING.

DR. G. HARDY CLARK'S system of child training in health and citizenship has been in use for a generation. Some of those who were trained by it are now parents making use of it in the training of their offspring. This system employs a score card, both sides of which are made use of. On one side there is provision for physical efficiency rating. The items listed for scoring are: Eczema and other skin diseases; skin, blood, or intestinal parasites; teeth decay, unclean, poor alignment; neglected tonsils, adenoids; deafness, discharging ears; recurrent digestive disturbance, neglected eyes, infections, vision, &c.; deformities of feet, limbs, spine; malnutrition, too fat, too thin, anemic; other persistent remediable conditions. Markings are on the basis of ten for perfect.

Another blank space is used for recording height, weight and age, and still another for the records of lung capacity as shown by tests made with a spirometer, and muscle strength and tone as shown by a dynamometer.

On one corner of this score card are given setting-up exercises. Children over 3 years of age go through these exercises daily. Preferably, they are done by the children in a group and are accompanied by music. While most children get an abundance of exercise through play, something is gained from giving a very few minutes daily to those exercises that make use of muscles and joints that are not so liable to be used in play activities.

The reverse side of the card is planned for the rating of the child's habits, some of which have to do with health and some with social life.

IT IS DANGEROUS.

W. M. writes:

1. Is a lump in the breast dangerous? I had X-ray treatments for this, which the doctor told me was gland trouble. Now it has returned. Could it be cancerous?

2. Is it dangerous to take spirits of ammonia in water for nerves?

REPLY.

1. A lump in the breast that comes back after removal is more than likely to be cancerous. All genuine lumps in the breast are potentially dangerous.

2. No. However, its continued use for that purpose is not wise. A person who has "nerves" should never lean long on anything. Leaning makes nerves worse.

POTATO STARCH.

F. A. writes:

1. Is starch from potatoes good to wash the hair with or not?

2. Is rain water good?

REPLY.

1. I know of no reason why it should be.

2. Yes.

TOO LATE NOW.

F. M. writes: Could you suggest a way to overcome pigeon chest?

REPLY.

No. If you will do hard muscle work, using the muscles of the back, breast and upper arms you may build up a muscle covering that will obscure it. Getting fat will serve the same purpose. Pigeon chest is developed in youth. After that, the pattern is maintained.

Come to Florida, Where Sun Spends the Winter

Spanish Atmosphere and Warm Breezes Make It Ideal Place to Relax; Ancient Shrines and Modern Playgrounds Offer Variety of Pleasure.

By DARRELL PRESTON AUB.

We Washington Post wanderers have just returned from a cruise of the Mediterranean aboard the splendid Statendam, on which we visited, among other entrancing places, the French Riviera. Today we have decided to do some exploring on our native continent, and we find ourselves on a comfortable Pullman train, traveling to the American Riviera, as the golden State of Florida has been called. We are rather anxious for a glimpse of this flowering, subtropic vacation-land, because the Christmas holidays are near, and so is Florida, and should this "preview" prove promising, we may really steal away for a winter vacation.

"Florida, Florida," the wheels seem to whisper the soft Spanish name, and the smiling, expectant faces of our companions reflect the name of the Land of Flowers, Health, youth, glamour, romance, beneath a golden sun; our quest is like that of the conquistadors of old.

Still Hunt for Youth.

Four hundred years ago Ponce de Leon, companion of Columbus, warrior and conqueror, worn by years of fighting and intrigue, came to Florida to find a fabulous spring of eternal youth.

Today thousands go there every winter on much the same quest. There is no miraculous spring—no matter, that is only a symbol. But all pilgrims to this land of heart's desire set in the halo of the southern seas, bathed in the golden sunshine of eternal June, gnd here youth, health, beauty, romance and adventure!

Due to the splendid hotels which have been built, the fine roads, delightful resorts and beaches and facilities for all sorts of sports and enjoyment, which have been developed in this sunshine State, the visitor of 1932 is more fortunate than Ponce de Leon.

Demand is high for travel to Florida. Every one who has even as little as a week at his disposal wishes to flee from the wintry North and exchange snow and sleet and icy winds for ideal summer days and balmy, moonlit nights.

Variety of Choices.

Let's go!

Before settling down for our holiday at Miami or Palm Beach, St. Petersburg or Lakeland, or whatever part of the State we have chosen for our haven, let us roam through the State, get acquainted with all these places and then make our choice. And if we have time let us sail from Miami or from Key West for a short visit to Havana, that charming Spanish city just a few hours away from the southern tip of Florida.

Jacksonville is the gateway to Florida. It is a busy, industrious city on the north shore of the St. John's River, 27½ miles by its winding course from the Atlantic Ocean, one of the few rivers in the world that flow north. Our sightseeing tour covers Jacksonville, its beautiful parks and equally charming suburbs. We follow the winding course of the river a few miles; we view "Mandarin," where Harriet Beecher Stowe received her inspiration for her great story, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and pass the beautiful home of Cummer, modeled after the home of Shakespeare at Stratford-on-Avon; the famous Spite Wall, and the home of Maj. James Monroe, the 112-year-old son of the fifth President of the United States.

Oldest City in U. S.

If we wish, we can motor from Jacksonville to St. Augustine, a delightful, restful trip over good roads. St. Augustine, the oldest city in the United States, is probably also the quaintest and most picturesque in the country. The story of St. Augustine is over 400 years old. When Ponce de Leon discovered it in 1513, during his search for the Fountain of Youth, it was an Indian village, known as Seloce. On August 28, 1565, Pedro Menendez de Aviles, a Spanish captain, arrived with 2,600 colonists, and raised the Spanish flag. The City of St. Augustine was founded and named in honor of the saint.

We enjoy our sightseeing here. The old Spanish buildings, the paving of the streets and sea walls were all built of coquina shells, brought in from Anastasia Island in dugout canoes by Indian prisoners.

Shrine of Shells.

On St. Francis street we come to the oldest house in America, at one time under three flags—the Spanish, English and American. It was built by Franciscan monks in 1584 out of coquina shells. This home was turned over to the American Historical Society some years ago to insure its preservation.

We spend a happy time in this fine old resort city, proud of its past, its mementos and memories, yet enjoying an interesting present.

Throughout Florida, but especially in St. Augustine, at every turn we meet suggestions of that wonderful Old South—of the time "before the war," which is so full of appeal to every Northerner. We wander past hedges of golden-hearted Cherokee roses; we linger in old-fashioned gardens, that are fragrant with jasmine and tuberose; we watch red and yellow butterflies dancing in the warm, winter sunshine and hear the haunting notes of the Florida mocking bird.

Sea Bottom Moves.

Now onward to Ocala and Silver Springs. From Ocala we motor to Silver Springs. "Nature's Underwater Fairyland," the largest and most picturesque inland subterranean gardens in America. The depth of these mammoth springs when viewed from the glass-bottomed boats reveal extraordinary beauty in a variety of color.

The next day brings us to Tampa, the busy city famous for its cigars, which gives us an idea (if its around Christmas time). The name "Tampa" is Seminole for "split wood for quick fires." Historically, it is the landing place of Narvaez and De Soto; it was first settled when Fort Brooke was established during the Seminole war. Tampa has a decidedly foreign appearance, due to the large number of Latin citizens. This is especially striking in the neighboring Ybor City, "Little Havana," where thousands of Latins are employed in the cigar factories. The architecture is Spanish. There are open-air cafes, magnificent club buildings, casinos, where the alluring dansons are held, narrow streets, grilled windows, and a general atmosphere of Cuba and Spain. We shall meet this atmosphere in the original later on, if we have the opportunity for a visit to Havana.

Our sightseeing out of Tampa will include a morning drive to the Bok bell tower, and an afternoon trip to St. Petersburg and Clearwater. On our way to the Bok tower we pass through a beautiful agricultural and citrous region, miles of grapefruit, orange and tangerine groves stretching into the distance. Then via Plant City, Lakeland, the highest city in Florida, 227 feet above sea level, and Winter Haven to Mountain Lake, where we see one of Florida's outstanding attractions—the Bok tower, and its famous carillon bells.

St. Petersburg is called "the city where the sun always shines." We shall learn why. There is so much sunshine in St. Petersburg that their postoffice is "open air," the first of its kind in the United States. Here we are in one of the most famous resorts on the West Coast. The climate is unsurpassed for equable, sunny days. The waters surrounding the city are famous angling grounds. Fishing, yachting, boating, bathing for water lovers. Then there are tennis golf and motoring. There are four golf courses, a yacht club, opera house, municipal pier and swimming pools, casino and children's playground. St. Petersburg is a city of beautiful homes, whose grounds are bright with hibiscus, poinsettia and bougainvilles; nearly every yard has an orange and a grapefruit tree. It is a city hard to leave.

Playground of Rich.

One morning we awake in our Pullman to find ourselves in West Palm Beach. We leave our train for a complete tour of Palm Beach, that famous rendezvous of wealth and fashion. We drive past beautiful homes that are like "castles in Spain" come true, past brilliant, tropical foliage, royal palms that stand like sentinels, Spanish bayoneta, exotic little bushes, guarding emerald lawns. Sweet jasmine and wild honey blossoms scent the air, and the Atlantic, indescribably blue, curls and froths upon the golden beach. This is Palm Beach, where nature and man, many millions and much care have combined to create a paradise, an artificial paradise, which has been described as being six weeks long, half a mile wide and as high as you care to pay.

It is quite possible to play golf or ride or fish for tarpon, if one is energetically inclined, but there is something restful and soothing about the air at Palm Beach, which induces the most delightful idleness.

Nothing Like It.

In the luxurious hotels, at brilliant dinner parties and dances and in the lobby every day, may be seen the smartest frocks and gowns of the coming season, while one may inspect or buy, as fancy dictates, the latest and most expensive creations of fashion in the wonderful shops of the leading New York modistes, milliners and jewelers. Here one may find, in the course of a winter, almost every one of note in the social, financial, diplomatic and artistic world.

Palm Beach is Palm Beach.

We travel on and come to Miami. Our time in Miami is crowded with sightseeing, sports and entertainment. We tour the city and its environs and go out to Coral Gables and Hialeah to view their attractions. We also cross the causeway to famous Miami Beach. Some time during our stay we will have an opportunity to enjoy bathing on the golden sands here.

Water Paradise.

Miami is a paradise for all who love the water. To say that it is situated on lovely Biscayne Bay is more than literally true, for all the pleasure craft of the Atlantic coast seem to foregather here every season, and half the life of the gay winter community is spent on the dancing waters of its wonderful harbor. There are constant regattas and races and festivities, in which hundred-thousand-dollar yachts and luxurious houseboats, incredibly swift hydroplanes and whole navies of motorboats play an active part.

The mysterious Everglades, the least explored region of the United States, extend up to the threshold of Miami. Some of the almost equally mysterious inhabitants of the Everglades, the picturesque Seminole Indians, may be encountered in Miami, stalking through the streets in their vivid-colored jackets and striking striped kilts. During our stay in Miami we shall drive out to the Seminole village to see the Indians and their native life. The men are usually away hunting alligators in the Everglades. The women sit about on their open, curious little huts, built on stilts, and weave and sew, but their black-eyed children may be induced to pose for our cameras.

Havana Close By.

Now some of us decide to visit Havana. It is so near, just a short trip off the coast of Florida, and we find ourselves in Spain transplanted. In a foreign city of narrow streets and colored stucco houses, which might well stand on some historic harbor of the Mediterranean. Our trip to Havana, if we have chosen the Oversea Railroad instead of the perhaps more restful overnight sail from Miami, is something entirely new in travel experiences.

To go to sea in a railroad train is a sensational experience. To glide for miles on unseen rails over the surface of the ocean fills us with boundless admiration for what is, next to the Panama Canal, the most brilliant feat of engineering the world has ever known. The Oversea Railroad connects the southern tip of the Florida Coast with Key West. From coral key to key the sure train speeds on, past slender silver palms flashing in the sunlight, through mangrove swamps and heron-haunted inlets and across great shallow lagoons that glow with all the hues of topaz and sunshot mother-of-pearl. Pelicans by the hundred flap their way over the waters or perch in endless convention on the posts that parallel the track.

Then Key West.

Then we come to Key West, a lovely tropical island, strongly fortified because of its strategic position. A few hours sail from here and Morro Castle rises from the sea to welcome us to Havana.

And here today's travels must end. Will the Carmen-like lure of this city keep us here, or shall we, remembering the soft breezes, the flowers and sun-gleaming beaches of Florida, return to the resort which, as we passed through on our journey, we knew to be our own haven of heart's desire?

I hope you have enjoyed Florida today, as I hope you will enjoy it in reality this winter. Next Sunday we go acruising to more distant lands.

$1,000 Music Prize Is Again Offered

Fifth Annual World-Wide Competition Announced at Hollywood.

Hollywood (U.P.).—The fifth annual world-wide prize composition contest has been announced by the Hollywood Bowl, famous for its summer open-air concerts. Composers of any nation are eligible for the $1,000 prize for a symphonic work which shall be submitted before April 10, 1933, and which shall be judged worthy of performance by the Bowl's 100-piece symphony orchestra.

The prize is made possible each year through the generosity of Katherine Yarnell, Los Angeles music lover. Three judges, all famous orchestral conductors, will select the best composition. The only restriction is that the work must be for performance by a full symphony orchestra.

Last year's winner was H. Waldo Warner, of London, who won with a tone poem, "Hampton Wick." The 1930 winner was Arne Oldberg, of Chicago. His prize concerto was played last summer, while Warner's tone poem will be given for the first time next summer.

Arguing upon the subject: "Resolved, That the expansion of the chain store system is detrimental to the best interests of the American people," four members of the Pi Chi Club, a girls' organization, staged the first debate of the season in the Columbus University School of Law last week.

Miss Helen Carroll, who, with Miss Alice Tourville, took the affirmative, was declared the best individual speaker. However, the negative team, composed of Mildred Hope and Maryan Tighe, presented the best argument, the judges held.

The judges were Mrs. Kathleen H. Dugan, Miss Helen C. Huhn and Miss Catherine M. Stafford, all graduates of Columbus University.

An "intersociety debate" between the Venetian Society and the Alpha Chi Upsilon Sorority also was held last week.

The negative side of the subject: "Resolved, that the policies advocated by the equal rights group are pernicious," was successfully upheld by the sorority team of Genevieve A. Finzel, Mary P. Fanning and Katherine E. Burns. William J. Tumulty, Edward J. Foley and Joseph R. Morris argued in the affirmative for the society.

Judges were M. P. O'Connor, C. A. Giblin and Miss Magdalene Borger.

Irene Bontz has been elected chairman of the social committee of the post graduate class and Emma Cooney, vice chairman. John G. Allen was named chairman of the class' entertainment committee.

Definite dates have not yet been set but it is expected that they will be announced next week. This action is taken by the council to prevent any conflict in the periods set for the respective celebrations.

Georgetown University.

Selected as the best individual speaker in the first interclub debate at the Georgetown University School of Law last week, Cornelius K. Hurley, of the Ashley M. Gould Law Club, is eligible for the final competition at the end of the academic year. Three more contests will be held to select the remaining finalists.

Second place in Wednesday's debate was won by Howard Boyd, son of the late Prof. Howard Boyd, who represented the John Carroll Law Club. Both men were team-mates, acting as counsel for the appellee in a moot court argument and were awarded the decision.

An illustrated lecture on "The Seadrome" will be given Tuesday evening at 8:15 o'clock at the School of Foreign Service by Edward R. Armstrong, to which officials of the school have issued invitations.

Dr. W. Coleman Nevils, S. J., president of Georgetown, attended the educational conference held in New York City last week under the auspices of New York University.

All the classes at the Georgetown School of Dentistry combined in the annual prom held last night at the Mayflower Hotel. Dr. William N. Cogan, dean and the Rev. John L. Gipprich, S. J., regent, were the honor guests. The committee on arrangements comprised Arthur J. Goldin, John O'Keefe, Carl Scavatto, William Brooks and John Murphy.

The all-university "Stunt Night" Wednesday at 8:30 p. m. in the Washington Auditorium will be enlivened by skits presented by student organizations. The university band will play and the glee club will give a program.

The homecoming football game will be played at Griffith Stadium at 2:30 o'clock, Thursday afternoon, between the George Washington University and the University of Oklahoma. The appearance of the bands of the two institutions will be a feature of the occasion.

Thursday night the General Alumni Association of the University will hold an alumni homecoming reception in the Chinese room of the Mayflower, which is open to all alumni. The reception will be followed by the all-university ball, given under the auspices of the student council.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE

"SCORPIO"

IF NOVEMBER 20 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 2 p. m. to 4 p. m. and from 8:30 p. m. to 9:25 p. m. The danger periods are from 11 a.m. to 12:15 p. m. and from 6 p. m. to 6 p. m.

Heavenly influences operating on this November 20 will tend to bring out the worst qualities in many people. Grouchy and disagreeable dispositions will seem to be the vogue for many. Do not trust to luck in any of your activities; the odds are decidedly against you on this day. Marriages consummated on November 20 should prove happy though romances begun will probably get off to a bad start.

The child born on this November 20 will show very definite tendencies to extreme laziness, both physical and mental. He must be made to see the value of right activity, the value of pursuing the really worth while. Outdoor exercise will do much to arouse and stimulate him. He will greatly enjoy music and should readily take to some stringed instrument. Much will be learned from the early reading of good books.

If November 20 is your birthday, you are very much inclined to be the type of person who drifts through life. Without expending much energy and by gently but firmly side-stepping as many responsibilities as possible, you will "get by" without too much difficulty. You will not really live, nor will you ever rouse yourself to the point where you can get much out of life. Most probably you will have one or more hobbies that you will pursue at intervals. You may dabble a bit in painting, writing or music.

If you are a woman, you are most likely inclined to be slovenly in the keeping of your home. You are not much interested in it and you allow that lack of interest to show in the care you give it. You take everything in a very matter of fact way and you are one of those people who believe that the morrow is the day on which things shall be done. You have a definite flare for sewing and for needlework of an artistic and decorative sort. You will never be accused of "overcaring" for your children, though it will never be said that you neglect them.

Successful people born on November 20:

Oliver Wolcott, soldier and statesman.

Benjamin Champney, artist.

Charles G. Halpine, soldier and humorist.

John Russell Young, journalist and author.

John M. Coulter, educator.

Josiah Royce, educator and author.

IDEALISTS PLANNING LONG WORLD CRUISE

Each Member Contributes $500 to Start Enterprise; Ship Has Theater.

San Francisco (A.P.).—Take 60 romantic dreams of the South Seas, one self-liquidating plan and one old sailing ship; mix vigorously and you have the Star of England expedition—adventure hunting men and women undertaking a three-year cruise of the world on a cooperative earn-your-way-as-you-go and divide-the-profits-later-if-any plan.

The story of the expedition aims, unfolded by its leaders here while making preparations to set sail, was one of oddly varying components—some coldly practical, others intensely idealistic, and, as a whole, perhaps, something like a hodgepodge of Moby Dick and Alice in Wonderland.

The ship, purged of an odor acquired during years in the fishing trade, is being rebuilt into a seagoing showboat, studio and laboratory—a globe-trotting home, workshop and theater for artists, writers, scientists and showmen.

Purpose of Expedition.

The avowed purpose of the expedition is travel, education, creation and sustenance at a cost far below the average individual's expenses at home, and three years combined work and play without having to worry about jobs or monthly bills.

Captain and cabin boy are to get the same amount of pay, if any. Owner, scientist, deckhand, author, cook, movie producer, mess boy and sculptor are to share equally in whatever fate or fortune lies ahead.

Expenses are to be held as nearly as possible to the vanishing point. It costs nothing to sail a windjammer. Food is cheap and in some cases will cost nothing at all. Otherwise, the only costs, say the expedition leaders, will be the financing of the ship's purchase, involving an amount not disclosed, and the few necessary supplies.

Each member of the expedition, except the seafaring men, must contribute $500 at the start. Leaders said this money was being used to rebuild the ship below decks, installing cabins, a theater to seat 160, library, studio, recreation hall, a few simple conveniences, and stores for six months. With that, the leaders said, members of the strange project may forget about money until November, 1935, or thereabouts. They think maybe by then the depression will have vanished.

Dream Widely Shared.

Herein lies the fulfilment for E. E. Grieve, new owner of the Star of England, of a widely shared dream—a life footloose and carefree in romantically beckoning parts of the world, living on exotic goodies bought for a song, a poem or a sketch, or otherwise—er—acquired.

The creative output of all hands is to be turned over to Arnold M. Malmquist, former Chicago, Cleveland and Milwaukee newspaperman, who is business manager, for sale wherever a buyer may be found.

Grieve said he expected the theater to furnish a large part of the revenue by showing films taken by the expedition cinematographers. Visiting places where movies are an innovation, or at least a rarity, he expects the show to pack the natives in at a shilling each.

The expedition will stop first at Honolulu and then go on to Suva, Fiji Islands, Borneo, Java and on through the South Seas as inclinations dictate.

$60,000,000 TIED UP IN BONDS FOR CRIME

An examination of records at the Federal Building today disclosed that more than $60,000,000 in cash, Government securities and real estate is being withheld annually from trade circulation by reason of being posted as bond in criminal cases.

The total amount of cash and securities on deposit to the credit of the United States District Court, and therefore not "working," is $376,000. The value of real estate posted with Lawrence S. Marino, assistant district attorney, is $36,685,850.

During the time the bond is in effect the security, whether cash or real estate, can not be sold, bartered, transferred or mortgaged, thus left stranded high and dry from business currents.

Out of the total, Federal officials estimated that bondsmen and professional bond runners reap an annual harvest of approximately $2,000,000. The bondsmen charge 5 per cent, but officals said, get double this amount by levying a charge of 5 per cent for each of the two required sureties.

The Federal officials went into higher mathematics to explain their figures. Pointing to their records they said that bail settings resulted in approximately 5,000 individual cases a year, supplemented by an additional 1,000 in which the grand jury or a United States district judge sets the bond. Multiply the 6,000 cases by the average bond of $2,500, which has average length of six months, then there is some $15,000,000 made up of real estate schedules encumbered by first and second mortgages in which the Government usually demands between four and eight times the amount of the bonds.

Said Miss Sue Harbottle, vice president of the University Y. W. C. A., upon assembling the material:

"A lot depends upon how smooth the man is. If he has shown you a good time, I believe he deserves to be kissed."

"If you let him kiss you on your first date, he will come back for another kiss. But that will be his sole reason. Cuddling is sufficient."

Miss Marjorie Cooper, campus beauty, reported, according to Miss Harbottle:

"A man soon loses interest if he is allowed to kiss a girl whenever he desires. Be cautious."

Miss Harbottle said she tried in vain to get the opinion of men students. They probably kiss, she said, but they don't tell, proving thus that they are gentlemen.

Legal Aid Bureau Kept Busy By Many Deserving Cases

Dozen Lawyers Volunteer Services in Defense of Needy.

With a modest but substantial record of achievement already behind it, Washington's newest help for the helpless, the Legal Aid Bureau, has just completed the first month of its operation. More than 60 cases have been handled in its brief existence by a volunteer staff of a dozen attorneys, six men and six women. They are aided by volunteer clerical assistants and law school students working from quarters at 1418 I street northwest, provided by the Council of Social Agencies, with which the bureau cooperates. Each lawyer donates time weekly to hours maintained every afternoon from 2 to 4 o'clock, except Saturday, when the hours are from 10 a. m. to noon, following up the cases undertaken from his own office.

The establishment last month of this Legal Aid Bureau brought to a total of about 80 the chain of these unique and useful social agencies throughout the country. Charles Evans Hughes, Chief Justice of the United States, is honorary president of the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations, which is helping the bureau here organize its work. Miss Beatrice A. Clephane, attorney, is director of the bureau, and Louis Ottenberg is chairman of the advisory committee of lawyers and social workers. As yet the bureau operates without a budget, but its pioneer workers, finding a fertile field for helpfulness in these troubled times, have begun their work with enthusiasm largely surmounting this handicap.

Only Needy Cases Taken.

"The bureau is not in competition with the legal profession," Miss Clephane explained yesterday, "but seeks only to help worthy persons who otherwise would be without the legal advice their cases warrant. In other words it handles only meritorious civil cases for destitute clients. As a general rule the bureau accepts no personal injury, divorce or bankruptcy cases. In divorce actions, when the husband is employed, the court will allow an attorney's fee. In personal injury cases the lawyer can obtain his contingent fee where there is a recovery. Therefore such and bankruptcy cases are referred to regular practitioners. Similarly defenses in criminal cases, which also the bureau does not handle, are referred to attorneys on a list prepared by the bar associations.

"There are, however, many types of cases which fall within the scope of the bureau. In the first month of operation the majority involved wage collections, debts, landlord and tenant, installment house contracts and workmen's compensation. In less than one-tenth of these cases was court action necessary. In the others amicable adjustments were made."

MISS BEATRICE A. CLEPHANE.

Woman of good Washington family, destitute, sued for $50,000 for alleged libel. Had good legal defense but could not retain counsel. Did not want to mortgage her future by having judgment against her. Member of Legal Aid staff now handling case.

Woman employed by beauty parlor. Husband out of work. Threatened with arrest for blackmail when she tried to collect wages. Bureau making this collection for her.

Other Instances.

Furniture store, delivering number of articles under installment contract, seized all when payment on one article was delinquent, the others being completely paid for. Return of articles paid for brought about by bureau.

"One of the most interesting developments of the first month," Miss Clephane said, "has been the enthusiasm and effectiveness with which students from various law schools of the District have assisted in investigatory work. One of these was successful in locating the father of seven destitute children, stranded with their mother in North Carolina. Another brought to amicable agreement a dispute over a property right of way."

Some legal aid bureaus operate as legal aid clinics. Dean Fox, of Catholic University Law School, a member of the bureau's advisory committee, is working out a plan for regular use of student assistants here. Dean Van Vleck, of George Washington University Law School, is cooperating along the same lines.

Gorillas Studied for Light On Primitive Man's Habits

(Associated Press.)

New light on some habits of primitive men may result from recent study of gorillas by a scientific expedition in Africa, although this does not mean that men are descended from gorillas.

Possibility that the gorilla may serve as an "illuminator of human history," helping scientists to reconstruct behavior of the human race in its early stages, was recognized by the expedition. Its members trailed gorilla bands for days at a time through the mountains of the Belgian Congo, under the leadership of Dr. Harold C. Bingham, psychologist of Yale University.

This report has just been published by the Carnegie Institution of Washington, which jointly sponsored the expedition with Yale.

Close to Mankind.

Scientists generally agree that gorillas are more closely related to the human race in physical structure than any other species, although there is believed to be no direct relationship between them. Most authorities on evolution believe men and apes developed separately, perhaps from some common ancestor in the remote past, who was neither man nor ape.

The expedition made a complete study of gorillas in their native wilds, including traveling, eating and nesting habits, organization of their bands under a leader, and behavior under all kinds of conditions.

"In such varieties of environment, where gorillas are traveling on the ground and leaving overt evidences of their activities," says Dr. Bingham, "there are convincing reasons for expecting welcome data to be obtainable bearing on primitive aspects of human migration.

"This prediction is supported by preliminary results, as well as the trend of biological thought since the gorilla became recognized 'as man's nearest kin structurally.'"

The gorillas were found to lead a lazy, hobo-like life, traveling continuously through the forests in bands of 2 to 35 individuals, under the leadership of an "old man" gorilla. Every night the band stops, builds rough nests on the ground or in the trees, and sleeps until morning. Nests are not occupied more than one night.

In one band of nine Gorillas trailed by the expedition, "the dominance of the leader was outstanding," says Dr. Bingham. "In general appearance he was the largest animal in the band, yet there were evidences of emaciation compared with the uniformly well nourished appearance among his smaller companions. His cheeks appeared hollow, even suggesting missing teeth.

Leadership Differs.

"All direct observation of the animals indicated that his leadership was paramount. He was the only animal that made vocal sounds that the observers could hear. Likewise he was the only adult of the group who betrayed excitement." Some larger bands had several dominant males, however.

Dominance of the old leader, resembling similar organization among primitive human tribes, lasts only as long as he is able to enforce his authority, Dr. Bingham suggests.

This possibility was seen in the discovery of one nest high in the mountains by itself, though usually the nests were found in groups. This nest may have been the last retreat of an old leader, whose band has broken up as the young males grew strong enough to defy him and break away.

Needy Boys' Farm Plans Cash Drive

Berkshire Retreat Does Not Share in Community Chest Funds.

The Berkshire Industrial Farm for needy boys announced yesterday that the annual drive for funds, with which to carry on the work of the farm, would begin this week.

"The farm," it was stated by Mrs. Charles Warren, local treasurer of the institution, "is situated at Canaan, N. Y., and although it takes care of a number of the Washington needy, it does not share in proceeds from the Community Chest drive. Its existence depends upon the generosity of those people who are interested in giving the youth of this country a chance."

The Berkshire Farm has for nearly half a century been providing a good home, understanding care, an education and a trade for boys who are fatherless, motherless, or both; the victims of poverty and broken homes, or who are brought into the Children's Court for truancy or vagrancy.

Dr. James to Lecture.

Dr. Bartlett B. James, teacher of the Men's Bible Class of the First Congregational Church, is inaugurating a new series of subjects today under the general heading, "The World's Religious Outlook," with subheadings as follows: "Theory of Religion," "Applied Religion," "Religion in Worship," "Emotional Religion," "Religion of the Cults and Mystics" and "Religion and the Great Adventure."

Possession

Taken from the Christian Science Monitor.

If one were to enumerate his possessions, his first thought might be to list only the material objects and the financial assets which he calls his own. But if one were to think more deeply there would invariably come the realization that the real substance of all that he is or has, is to be found in the mental realm. Thus it would be seen that such qualities as industry, originality, wisdom, perspicacity, joyousness, love, and the like, constitute one's actual possessions.

They constitute the guarantees, as well as the perpetuity, of success. This fact finds expression in Proverbs, where it is said: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. . . . Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honour."

Many have found it true that, as the quoted words declare, both "length of days" and "riches and honour" are the natural rewards of wisdom, or right thinking. In other words, the expression of spiritual-mindedness, true intelligence, is a sound basis for successful achievement. Business men, manufacturers, writers, home makers, and students can all trace their visible well-being to the soundness of their thinking. Conversely, failure is the result of thinking which is devoid of Principle, of wrong thinking, the basis of which is the belief in materialism.

There is but one true basis for thought, even God, the divine Mind. False and destructive thinking lacks this basis, and rests upon ignorance, illusiveness, and carnality. Christian Science insists that God is the source of all true thought, that God is infinite and perfect Mind, and that the natural function of man's being is to reflect this Mind by expressing divine qualities.

Because this is so, spiritual thinking is powerful; and hope, trust, love, charity, vision, honesty, and the like constitute power here and now, for the reason that God creates, supports, and gives them action. Because God is always present, man in His likeness is forever aware of the divine guidance which this Mind continually imparts. Indeed, man may be described in his true being as the very expression or idea of God, good. From this basis all wrong thoughts can be destroyed, proved unreal.

Could one possess greater wealth than the knowledge of these sublime truths? Solomon of Biblical days appreciated their mighty worth, for, when he had the opportunity to ask for whatsoever he might wish, he did not pray for material riches, but for "an understanding heart." This prayer was so wise that it was answered not only in the gift of wisdom and understanding, but with added "riches and honour." Here is Scriptural illustration of the fact that realization of spiritual subetance as true possession equips a man with spiritual power, and enables him to overcome fear, lack, restricted opportunity, and limited activity.

Christian Science teaches that God is infinite Mind, eternal Life, everlasting Truth. The truths of being are accurately set forth in "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, who discovered Christian Science and gave it to the world. Mrs. Eddy's own career was a remarkable proof of the effectiveness of spiritual or reflected possession; for it may be said today that the Christian Science movement, as evidenced in healing, in church building and in teaching, is due to Mrs. Eddy's initial realization that man's true possessions are the gifts of God. Mrs. Eddy's rich spiritual life was progressively manifested in sufficiency in human experience, and the Church of Christ, Scientist, which she founded, has prospered through love.

That the truth about God can destroy unhappy mental states most persons will readily admit; but many are puzzled as to how this truth can operate to improve what is called a material condition.

Actually, however, whether it be called material or mental, all human experience is comprised in consciousness. It is in consciousness that one's sense of being obtains; hence, it is only in consciousness that any discord can be healed. There is nothing wrong with God, nor with man. Discord of any kind is only a false sense, which Truth destroys.

Jesus the Christ was rich in the knowledge of His spiritual possessions, and He proved this knowledge by destroying the belief that a multitude could remain hungry, that a man could be palsied, or that a friend could die. In His entire ministry He demonstrated the practicality of applying to all sorts of conditions the abundant love of God. There is wealth in heaven. It is near at hand.

The prayer which rises to commune with God and to reflect a sense of the divine affluence finds the realization of spiritual sufficiency. Today, through Christian Science, God's will is being more widely discerned and the way-shower's ministry better understood; for, as Mrs. Eddy says on page 494, of Science and Health: "It is not well to imagine that Jesus demonstrated the divine power to heal only for a select number or for a limited period of time, since to all mankind and in every hour, divine love applies all good."

Ancient University Safe Is Junked

Valparaiso, Ind. (U.P.).—Valparaiso University's ancient safe, which guarded the money of students as far back as 1870, has been junked.

It is recalled that at one time two bandits entered the office and demanded its contents. Two women accountants screamed and one slammed the safe door. Pursuit of the bandits resulted in the fatal shooting of one and capture of the other.

Dude Thinks Saddle Horns Are Musical

Superior, Mont. (U.P.).—Musical horns on saddles may be the next invention for riders, according to the conception of an Eastern dude ranch visitor regarding the function of that portion of cowboy equipment.

"Do you want a saddle with a horn?" he was asked.

"Oh, I guess not," he nonchalantly answered. "Traffic out here isn't anything like it is at home."

POST MODEL HOME IMPRESSES VISITORS

The Washington Post model home at 327 Emerson street northwest has proved to be a sensation in real estate circles. It has made a decidedly good impression upon the many persons who have inspected it during the week. The reaction of the numerous groups who have seen it has been most favorable. Built by the well-known Cafritz Organization and exquisitely furnished by P. J. Nee Co., Inc., its presentation is the outstanding real estate event of the fall season.

This home is the exhibit structure of that organization's group at Fourth and Emerson streets. These new Cafritz lifetime homes at Fourth and Emerson streets northwest represent the utmost value for the money spent and excel in those comforts and conveniences which make for hominess and happiness. The personal attention and direct supervision of the Cafritz Organization in every detail of design and construction assure the buyer of enduring satisfaction.

Large Costs Saved.

Through volume of construction, large financial resources, tremendous purchasing power and, in addition, decreased cost of construction, the Cafritz Organization enables the purchaser to save hundreds of dollars, thereby getting a better home for less money. Officials of the company remind that it is this policy of sharing savings with the purchaser that has made the Cafritz lifetime homes the best buy in the city.

These homes at Fourth and Emerson streets northwest, with their high elevation, the wide street and open court effects of their residential square, makes them healthful places to live in. Then, too, they are very close to the beautiful Grant and Sherman Circles, and just one block from transportation and school.

Many new and novel features have been incorporated in these homes. They include the new step-down living room, a smart innovation, offering a distinctive treatment for attractive furnishings. You go down two steps into this room, which is below the general first floor level. The dining room is raised and adjoins the living room. Another popular feature incorporated in these homes is the recreation room in the basement. They are completely finished in oiltex, with heat and ventilation, and a charming fireplace. There are no obstructions in this room. It is an ideal place for den or entertaining.

Kitchen Is Intriguing.

The kitchen is of special interest. Bright and spacious in silver and green color scheme, the completeness and practical arrangement leave nothing to be desired in housekeeping convenience. The colored porcelain sink, 8 feet long, with double drain board, built-in Oxford cabinets, electric refrigerator, folding dinette set and console gas range, appeal to the modern housewife, saving time and labor.

On the second floor there are three very large, bright rooms, with large wardrobe closets, linen and cedar closets; two beautiful, colored tile baths, one in green and one in blue, with built-in tub and shower, Venetian mirror medicine cabinets and chromium-plated fixtures.

All of these homes have concealed radiation, giving additional wall space for placing of furniture. Numerous other features in these charming homes include many electrical outlets and radio outlet, bronze screens and metal weather-stripping throughout. The bright and dry cellars contain double laundry trays, instantaneous hot-water heater, Red Jacket heating plant and toilet.

Of Colonial Order.

Modern in detail, these homes are of the colonial, red tapestry brick, with mansard roofs, three wide-covered porches, breakfast porch and sleeping porch, fully screened. They are on large, sodded lots, 142 feet deep, and have detached garages. These have "over-the-top" doors and are easy to get in or get out of. A child can easily operate these counterbalance sliding doors. The paved street and alley improvements are paid for by the Cafritz Organization.

With more than 3,000 Cafritz lifetime homes built and sold to satisfied purchasers, officials of the organization state that this is, without a doubt, the greatest home value ever offered by it. The record proves the confidence the buying public has in the sound construction of the Cafritz home.

That it is easy to own one of these exceptional home values is apparent when one realizes that cash payments are as low as $500. FINE SHEPHERD PARK HOME OPENS TODAY

William H. Saunders Co., Inc., Show Artistic English Type Residence.

Seldom has so remarkable an offering in convenient, substantial and artistic home construction been presented to prospective home owners as that opened today by William H. Saunders Co., Inc., at 1200 Juniper street northwest in Shepherd Park. The Saunders corporation, always sensing the modern demand, has placed on the market this thoroughly up-to-date, "all electric" home, designed by F. G. Wilcox.

Of the charming, English style of architecture, this pleasing dwelling of brick and half timber stands on a beautifully landscaped and shrub-adorned lot with a frontage of 93 feet. A suitable slate roof and copper gutters and downspouting complete the interesting exterior.

Situated on a splendid lot, the structure commands a view extending through a beautiful residential operation running from Alaska avenue and Kalmia road to Juniper street, and is close to the new school erected in this neighborhood.

As the outer construction satisfies, so does the interior of this dwelling. Front entrance is had through a pretty covered porch into a reception hall with closet, leading to a large, pleasant living room with stone open fireplace and a cozy bay window seat arranged over the radiator. Its windows, like those of the entire house, are of the efficient Fenestra casement make, in steel. The living room is of the fashionable, step-down plan.

Ample space is afforded for serving meals in the well-lighted dining room, opening on a wide, covered, concrete rear porch from which an entrancing view is obtainable. Next to it is a large, bright kitchen with an abundance of suitably ordered cabinet space and the latest of electrical equipment, including General Electric refrigeration, clock, ventilating fan, Hot Point range, &c. Nearby is a cunning breakfast nook.

All of the halls and first-floor rooms are done in lightly tinted Duro Tex with the exception of the kitchen, which is sanitas-walled and has inlaid linoleum flooring. The basement boasts of a spacious recreation room and all the other necessary heating and laundering facilities. A two-car, brick garage completes the ground layout.

The size of the upstairs bedrooms is a feature of the house. They have one large closet and plenty of closet space. On the second floor are two modern, tiled baths with tub and shower as well as silent plumbing. All the metal fixtures are of the popular chromium.

No one should miss the opportunity of visiting this delightful residence. It may be reached quickly and easily by driving out Sixteenth street to Alaska avenue and following that thoroughfare to Juniper street.

NEW HOME BUILDING SERVICE IS OFFERED

Morgan E. Morgan's Staff of Architects Will Help Plan Residences.

Morgan E. Morgan invites anyone contemplating buying a home to drop in at the reception and display room of Custom Built Homes on Sixteenth street and view his exhibition of artist's renderings and plans of homes done by experts in house design. He has organized a service at this central office which endeavors to reduce the client's worries, to solve the problems of construction details for the amateur and keep the bogey of mounting costs in check. He has eight well-known independent builders operating through him and cooperating with him to this end.

It is a pleasant adventure to build a home under the supervision of Mr. Morgan and one of his corps of builders. None of the rest of it is lost and the conditions under which one discusses one's needs, problems and wishes are ideal.

For the reception room at 1108 Sixteenth street is furnished as an attractive home living room, where one can relax and chat informally. Everything has been done to insure the ease and comfort of the prospect, and there is no sense of being hurried to premature decisions. For it is realized here that most people build a house only once in a lifetime, and that they are entitled to the last vestige of pleasure and excitement while engaged in this pleasant task.

Unlimited Selection.

There is on display here at this inviting reception room an extraordinarily comprehensive collection of all types and sizes of houses to meet every conceivable demand. The pictures are done in color to give a more accurate idea of the completed house. And the accompanying plans, as well as the pictures are drawn to scale. The architectural selection is practically unlimited, ranging from small five-room cottages up to the most impressive of larger homes, with air conditioning against Washington's torrid summers.

But however small the house, the same thoughtful attention to harmony of detail and practicality is given the plans. And in every case they are notably individual and arresting. For the day has passed when home owners are willing to accept colorless replicas of standardized houses for their dwelling places.

In the event that none of the wide variety of plans on hand satisfy the customer, even with alterations, an entirely original set of plans will be drawn up to suit his taste and needs. This architectural consultation and service costs nothing above the one lump sum price agreed upon for the completed house before the initial steps are taken.

Construction Prices Low.

The notion that a house built to order to express the owner's personality is a prohibitively expensive undertaking is quickly dispelled by study of the prices listed at this office. For they are as cheap or cheaper than the same thing in the same neighborhood already built and for sale speculatively.

That is due to the fact that material and construction costs have dropped to a new low such as has not been known in years. Accompanying all the plans are estimates computed on the monthly payment basis for the convenience of the purchaser. And one final and inclusive price includes everything—architectural advice and service, construction, financing and lot. There are some eye-opening surprises in store for prospective buyers in regard to the low price scale offered by this office.

Because of the number of builders associated in this custom-built homes service a city-wide choice of location can be offered. The client is not limited to any one subdivision, but may take his pick of all the attractive and wisely restricted neighborhoods. This assures him of permanent satisfaction in his home.

Realty Board Plans Business Lunches

First Will Be Held Tuesday to Discuss Larger Properties.

The Washington Real Estate Board has just adopted a new idea which it will put into effect Tuesday afternoon at 12:30 o'clock at the Ambassador Hotel. It will hold a weekly business luncheon where real estate deals, valuations and so forth will be discussed. Morton J. Luchs, vice president of Shannon & Luchs Co., was chosen director to arrange these real estate discussions.

These meetings will touch only on the larger propositions, such as business properties, apartment houses, small investment properties and vacant land. The sale of homes, mortgages and so forth will not be discussed at these meetings.

All brokers and their salesmen or leasing men interested in the sale, exchange or leasing of any of these larger properties will attend these meetings. The meetings will be closed to outsiders. The Washington Real Estate Board expects a great interest to be shown here because of the possibility of many deals being thought of and worked out at these weekly luncheons.

NONESSENTIALS CUT FROM CHEAPER HOME

"Savings in the cost of the small home of the future will not come from a change in the exterior wall materials used, but will come chiefly from the elimination of nonessentials in design, from shop fabrication of the interior and from lessened financing cost for the whole structure," L. E. Olsen, of Olsen & Urbain, Chicago architects, told members of the American Face Brick Association and the Face Brick Dealers' Association at their recent annual convention at French Lick, Ind.

"Every manufacturer, engineer, architect, sculptor and poet is inventing new methods and materials for residence construction," said Mr. Olsen, "and these, of course, may influence new construction. In what direction, no one knows, but my guess is that houses will continue to be built much the same as at present, excepting that the public is asking for lower costs, firesafe construction, permanent materials, less cracks and shrinkage, insulation, air conditioning, automatic heat, with lower interest rates, financing charges and reduced taxes.

Factors Are Discussed.

"Can these lower costs be obtained through shop fabricated homes? First, the public does not now want them, but it may accept them under pressure; second, their cost can not compete with wood-faced homes, to which class they belong in the economic scale; third, the cost of a brick residence should be no more than for a house with all steel walls having the same dimensions, using the same arrangement as the steel design, with no basement or attic, which are the places where the new designs effect the greatest saving. We have found that of the newer ideas advanced only one—the steel frame—has merit.

"The factory-fabricated house design advocates the elimination of unessentials, and with this idea I agree.

"Like others, we have been experimenting in trying to cheapen the exterior walls of houses, but we have found it uneconomical to disturb this one-eighth part of the cost of a house, amounting to $1,000 on an $8,000 home. Three important things operate against the panel type of exterior—the joint at panel points, restricted design, and last, but not least, labor unions. The labor unions are entirely forgotten in the shop-fabricated house, and we all know they are not to be forgotten.

Wall Panels of Brick.

"However, if wall panels are to be used, they can well be of brick. In Chicago, experiments are being made on reenforced brick masonry which make me believe we will have a cheaper and better method of construction and it will be all masonry. I can see the possibility of a precast brick slab delivered to the job with a finished surface having beauty and wearing qualities."

When speaking about the lowering of costs in interior arrangements and in materials for interior use, Mr. Olsen said: "There will be more use of the combined door jamb and trim in metal, which will not be affected by moisture and will not open up at the corners and will speed up construction, at less cost. Lathing and plastering must go out of the small house. Those trades cause the greatest delay and trouble due to moisture in the construction of a building, and in the North in winter temporary heat is required with additional cost and bother.

"When the masonry is finished and the building is under roof, the carpenter with the use of some form of wall board can continue right on erecting partitions, finish the walls with wall board and lay flooring before finished partitions are erected or after. While erecting partitions, combined trim and jamb lining can be set up, and the walls are finished.

Basement Is Eliminated.

"We have found that the elimination of the basement saves 5 to 7 per cent, taking into account the added cost for laundry and heater space on the first floor. In larger homes our clients are asking for social rooms in the basement, and we have found that the only facing material that can stand basement conditions is brick. We have tried other materials only to regret it.

"It would be fine if some of the lost motion in small house construction could be eliminated. This we find is due to the number of trades required—eighteen in all. However, it is not the exterior masonry wall that causes delay, for the walls on an $8,000 home can be erected in three days with six bricklayers. Other portions of the building could be erected faster by doing away with plastering and by simplifying methods and organization."

Where Costs Are High.

Mr. Olsen urged that special attention be given to lessening the financing and taxing costs on small houses, and stated: "The high cost of owning one's home is not in the original cost but in the financing and carrying charges, taxation and special assessments. By reducing the annual financing charges even one-fifth of 1 per cent and interest 1 per cent, the amount saved annually on a $5,000 first mortgage would equal normal interest charges on $1,000, or considerably more than 10 per cent of the original cost of the house alone."

"After the depression is over," concluded Mr. Olsen, "the public will be convinced that a home built according to income with a reasonable first mortgage is the safest and most logical investment."

Gravatte Offices Say 5500 Fourth Street Group in Great Demand.

The office of L. T. Gravatte reports that there remain for sale only two in the group of new homes in the 5500 block of Fourth street northwest, and attributes the success of the operation to the foresight of the builder, the late Charles L. Tankersley, in offering the public an appealing, highly restricted home community.

The homes are fine in quality, of the most skillful workmanship, the ultimate in comfort and convenience.

The homes are built of hard, red brick from foundation to roof, with concrete front porches, brick columns, iron balustrades and slate mansard roof. They contain six large rooms, breakfast alcove, colored tiled baths, extra colored tiled lavatory with large, front master bedroom, cedar closets, colonial solid brass lighting fixtures; kitchen equipped with the most approved, up-to-date labor-saving cabinets, large-size Frigidaire, inlaid embossed linoleum, Sanitas wall coverings, screened sleeping and breakfast porches, detached garage. Their beautiful lawns are well landscaped with shrubbery.

Hundreds of homes were built by Mr. Tankersley in his 25 years of extensive operations. They embraced those for persons of moderate means in the row-house sections of the Northwest and Northeast to the most expensive detached and semidetached homes in Cleveland Park and Chevy Chase.

In all of his operations, Chevy Chase, Cleveland Park, Northeast, Northwest and in his final work, the 5500 block of Fourth street (sample house 5502), one will note that he has used the same superb quality, excellent workmanship and the latest in design and comforts.

The unfinished group was completed by the office of L. T. Gravatte, for the trustees, in the same manner, having in mind the principles of the builder. You now have the opportunity to secure these remaining two quality homes at prices adjusted to meet today's market.

MEADOWBROOK AREA OFFERS FINE HOMES

Monroe Warren Allows for Reduced Incomes in Future Plans.

Interest continues unabated in Meadowbrook, the beautiful Chevy Chase development, just south of Columbia Country Club.

Meadowbrook, Inc., managed and directed by Monroe Warren, has set a new standard in fine home construction. Mr. Warren believes that there are many families who are in need of and will purchase homes today if these can be secured in a restricted and controlled community at a price in keeping with reduced incomes.

With this idea they have planned a number of individual homes that will meet with instant approval because of their surprising values that will be apparent immediately to all homeseekers. With years of experience in the building of fine residences, with the most capable mechanics in their employ, with today's low cost of construction materials, they have been able to realize this ideal.

Profits Cut Fine.

By elimination of all overhead financing and carrying charges, and finally by a willingness to accept a very small profit, they have been able to produce a dwelling built in accordance with the following specifications on large lots in Chevy Chase, Md., on ground owned and subdivided by the Chevy Chase Land Co., at the remarkably reasonable price of $10,750.

The Chevy Chase Land Co. is cooperating with Mr. Warren in every way possible in the furtherance of his commendable project. The rapid disposal of his homes, built to plan, proves beyond doubt the soundness of his policy of small profits and quick sales. The site for this operation contains 58 home sites, 24 of which are built on or are being built on.

The tract is located conveniently to schools, stores, transportation, neighboring developments and clubs. Every lot has a minimum frontage of 65 feet and is abutted by concrete streets and curbed sidewalks, installed and paid for. The entire community is served by every utility—sewer, water, gas, electricity—and handsomely planted with shade trees.

Variety of Designs.

The houses, built to plan, are of various designs, each being planned by a good architect. Their architecture is controlled so as to be in conformity with the generally fine appearance of the development, and their construction is the most modern and substantial.

In explanation of this plan, Mr. Warren announces the design for a 1933 model home that can be built for a prospective home owner for the foregoing sum on terms of one-fourth cash and $56 a month. It is of sightly colonial style of architecture and all brick construction, with slate roof, copper flashing, gutters and downspouting.

It can be situated on a large landscaped lot, bounded by concrete sidewalks and streets. The plan includes a large living room, open fireplace, dining room, breakfast nook, de luxe kitchen with built-in cabinets, one-piece sink with double drainboards, and equipped with electric refrigeration and ventilation. The buyer has the choice of either gas or electric range. The kitchen floor will be covered with inlaid linoleum.

The plan will provide for three large bedrooms, cedar closets of ample size, two baths and a large, floored attic over the entire structure.

Ohio Organizations Study Mortgages

Gov. White Names Groups to Assist Owners in Refinancing.

Gov. George White, of Ohio, has announced appointment of a State-wide farm and home protective committee to set up organizations in every county to counsel and assist farmers and home owners in regard to mortgages on their property maturing or past due.

"The purpose of these organizations," the governor said, "is to bring together the mortgagor and mortgagee and attempt to work out some plan of refinancing whereby the property owner may continue in possession for sufficient time to work out his problem."

The State-wide committee, serving without pay, will designate local committees in each county.

Camden Puts Over First Home Show

Modern Home Given Away at Exhibition Which 50,000 Attended.

More than 50,000 persons visited the recent Camden County, N. J., home show. And the chamber of commerce, which conducted the show, is already preparing for a like event in 1933.

"This is the golden year of real estate opportunities," the Camden County Real Estate Board emphasized.

A modernized home of six rooms and bath was given away as a door prize. The feature exhibit was a scaled model of a six-room, brick, English type house, which will be built next year and given away by the chamber of commerce as the 1933 home show door prize. Camden County merchants exhibited.

Real Estate Inventory Started in Cleveland

An inventory of all real estate in Cleveland is now going forward which will give the city its actual "stock on hand" of real estate. The Department of Commerce is aiding in the study.

Air-conditioning of homes has made two significant appearances: (1) In the "exhibition homes"—as for example, in that of the Roland Park Co., Baltimore, in Northwood. (2) As a feature of homes in the newspaper want ads. In building permits issued during October, Chicago was beaten in total of dollar value by its largest suburb, the city of Evanston. New residential construction was a large element in the figure.

OPENING OF CIRCLE GATEWAY TO HILLS

With the opening of Westmoreland circle, on Massachusetts avenue at the District line, a fitting gateway is provided for Westmoreland Hills, the beautiful new home development of the Loughborough Development Corporation.

This organization owns a large tract of land consisting of approximately 500 acres along the District line at Massachusetts avenue. It is high, rolling, heavily wooded ground and undoubtedly is one of the choicest residential locations in Washington and its environs.

The first section, now under development, lying between Dalecarlia Park and Westmoreland Circle, embraces nearly twenty acres, on which will be constructed approximately 50 individual homes. These homes are being planned from the ideas of the purchasers and are designed by Porter & Lockie, the company's architects, to conform with the natural beauty of their settings.

In planning this subdivision the developers were guided by the published recommendations of the authorities who attended the recent conference called by the President on home building and home ownership. The individual home sites have a building restriction width of 70 feet. The topography of the land has been followed and the natural beauty fully preserved.

The object of the developers is to have this first section immediately occupied with homes, in order to establish a community and open up

BARGAIN IS OFFERED IN FINE RESIDENCE

Three-Story Home Available on Rittenhouse Street at $25,000.

An astonishingly fine residential offering is being announced today by Edward H. Jones & Co., Inc., at 3521 Rittenhouse street northwest, at the corner of Nevada avenue. It is a very attractive and pretentious brick dwelling of English type, three stories in height. The house is now offered at $25,000, approximately one-half of its original price.

Situated at one of the best locations in Chevy Chase, D. C., the house stands in a very restricted, high-class neighborhood, close to Chevy Chase circle. Thoroughly renovated, it is of center-hall plan and noted for the spaciousness of its rooms and its "all electric" kitchen. Its grounds are planted nicely with Colorado blue spruce, and there is a pretty rose arbor connecting the house with a detached brick garage of four-car capacity. A large side porch has entrances into living room and library.

The basement contains a large, comfortable recreation room, a maid's room, maid's bath, oil burner and hot water heating system. On the first floor are a spacious living room with library back of it, a dining room and large breakfast room, complete electrically equipped kitchen and tiled lavatory. All the lower floor walls are paneled.

Second Floor Plan.

On the second floor are four commodious bedrooms, the master bedroom, having a roomy dressing room and private bath. There also is a hall bath on this floor. The third floor has two rooms and a large cedar storage closet, and there is ample closet space throughout the house.

To assure the purchaser of this home of the latest of conveniences, the owners have, at a great expense, installed a modern electric kitchen. The equipment includes an electric range, a large, monitor top, electric refrigerator, an electric ventilating fan, an electric clock and an electric dishwasher.

The use of the electric range assures convenience, cleanliness, definite results in cooking and superior food. The General Electric Hotpoint range installed in this house has time and temperature controls which are so certain and accurate that a meal may be placed in the oven, the temperature and time controls set and the kitchen deserted from human attendants for the entire day.

It produces, upon the return of the occupants of the home, a completely cooked and piping hot meal, done in every detail in exactly the perfect manner. The electric oven is so insulated and divorced from oxygen consumption that foods are cooked entirely in their own juices, eliminating the need of pot watching and basting and producing more savory and tasty culinary appeals.

Room Heat Not Affected.

With a temperature maintained in the electric oven over a period of several hours at 400 degrees, the room temperature is increased not more than one or two degrees, so efficient is the insulation of an electric oven.

The electric refrigerator preserves foods at a temperature less than 50 degrees, thus assuring the elimination of bacteria development. It also prepares delicious desserts and provides an adequate supply of convenient-sized ice cubes.

The electric ventilating fan is situated in this extraordinary Rittenhouse street house so that the air will be changing constantly. Because of the use of electrical equipment which consumes none of the oxygen, clean, cool air is assured at all times.

The electric clock, which requires no winding, runs continually with assured accuracy and furnishes the time of day for many purposes.

The electric dishwasher accomplishes the final task of the kitchen—the pleasant "doing of dishes." This duty, generally conceded to be the worst of household tasks, becomes pleasant only because of the use of an electric dishwasher, which accomplishes its purpose in a more scientific and a more sanitary way, and at the same time does it quickly and efficiently.

Because of this equipment, the ultimate occupants of 3521 Rittenhouse street will find constant joy in the kitchen, with never a chance for drudgery.

New Plan for Paying Architects Is Urged

The homebuilder is not entirely satisfied with the architect's custom of charging for his services a percentage of the cost of the building. R. Clifton Sturgis, in the current American Architect, points out the value to both owner and architect of the payment of a fixed fee for the service rendered, plus the payment by the owner of all costs for making the drawings and for other professional services required.

The plan proposed is similar to that adopted by the United States Housing Corporation in handling wartime housing. A few architects have been using the method for many years with satisfaction both to architect and client.

TAX REVISION IS AIM OF REALTY BOARDS

Liberalization of Payment Plans Already Voted in Several States.

Liberalization in the plan of tax payments has been achieved in a number of States and is being asked by real estate boards for coming legislative sessions. Budget watching is getting results, reports to the National Association of Real Estate Boards show. Assessment adjustments lag far behind the need brought about by the changed business conditions of the past three years, but they are under way.

More than $17,500,000 will be saved in Los Angeles tax bills in 1932-33 due to budget reductions made by the three major governments in the area, the county, city, and city schools. The saving is practically 18 per cent of the 1931-32 tax bill. Assessment roll totals declined about 23 per cent. The Property Owners' Division of the Los Angeles Realty Board is preparing a bill providing for reduction of delinquent tax penalties and redemption fees.

Amendment of certain State laws which make city tax expenditures mandatory, will be asked by the Brooklyn Real Estate Board at the coming session of the New York State Legislature. Mandatory legislation is estimated to account for between $103,000,000 and $247,000,000 annually in the New York City budget. The board has a committee now studying the 1933 city budget.

Boards Plan Action.

Assessment cuts for New York City real estate are estimated to be about 4 per cent of the 1932 final assessments. Real estate boards hold that cuts are needed and are gathering forces for action.

Facts on city finances of Boston have been prepared by a joint committee on municipal finance of the Boston Chamber of Commerce and the Boston Real Estate Exchange. The Pittsburgh Real Estate Board, through its community research bureau, is scrutinizing amount of city and county property now out of use, and condition of that under lease. It is recommending budget laws.

The St. Louis Real Estate Exchange is sponsoring: (1) Payment of general property taxes in four installments instead of in an annual lump sum. (2) Penalty on delinquent general property taxes, now 1 per cent a month, to be cut in half.

The Birmingham Real Estate Board is asking reduction from 15 per cent to 8 per cent as the interest rate in redemption of properties sold to the State or to an individual purchaser for taxes, or provision for payment of all ad valorem taxes in three installments.

New Plan in Alabama.

Alabama has adopted a plan of payment of ad valorem taxes in three installments. It permits by a new law redemption of properties through payment of 8 per cent interest.

The former rule was 15 per cent. West Virginia has adopted the semi-annual payment of taxes and extended the time for redemption of delinquent real estate for the years 1929, 1930 and 1931.

Texas has new legislation remitting interest and penalties on ad valorem State and county taxes, if paid on or before December 31 of this year. New Jersey has just made provision for installment of delinquent taxes.

The Baltimore Real Estate Board is urging a proposed ordinance to relieve the city of the necessity of imposing and collecting special benefit assessments in connection with long-delayed and sometimes abandoned public improvement projects. The board supports an ordinance now pending that would reduce the penalty and interest charges on delinquent tax bills from 8½ per cent to 4¾ per cent in December of the current year.

Building Code's Function Stated

Does Nothing More Than Provide Minimum of Safety.

The home owner is informed by the builder that the construction of his house conforms to the building code should know that this means only that the minimum standard of safety has been attained, says Tyler Stewart Rogers, managing editor of the American Architect.

"The sole function of the building code or ordinance," Mr. Rogers states, "is protection of life and property. By no stretch of the imagination can they be looked upon as fixing other than minimum standards of safety. They give no consideration whatever to durability, maintenance, quality, performance or economic factors beyond the essential requirements for safety. There is an almost universal tendency, however, to regard compliance with code standards as assurance of adequacy in all respects. Nothing could be more detrimental to good design and construction.

"The obvious cause of this attitude toward codes is the common desire to build at minimum cost. Owners feel that if designs and specifications meet code requirements, they are good enough. Operating costs, maintenance, market value, satisfactory service to tenant or owner through future decades are forgotten in the belief that the codes take care of these things. Correction of this condition lies largely in the hands of architects."

MODERNIZING HOME MEANS MANY JOBS

Special to The Washington Post.

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 19.—Possibilities for a quarter billion to a half billion dollars' worth of new jobs are opened up by the decision of the building and loan associations for the country to use the funds they borrow from the Home Loan Banks to finance modernization, said to be needed by 75 per cent of the existing homes. The decision is reported by the United States Building and Loan League, on basis of a survey of a few days ago in which it asked building and loan executives all over the country what kind of home loans they would make with the money they can borrow as members of the new national home-financing system.

The jobs to be created will be largely in the building and allied trades, and will come as a result of a Nation-wide extension of credit to home owners who want to improve, repair and modernize their dwellings. Campaigns to reduce unemployment by encouraging home improvement have been successful in the past year and a half wherever money was available, Ward B. Whitlock, Springfield, Ill., president of the league, points out and now the money which the Home Loan Banks will supply to the associations will provide financing facilities to start home modernizing on the great scale which is needed.

Extent of Borrowing.

The associations may borrow twelve times as much as their stock subscription in the regional banks which is set by the law at a minimum of 1 per cent of their home mortgages. With all the associations in the country holding $8,500,000,000 in assets, at least $1,000,000,000 could be borrowed by them when all the associations have joined and when the banks have raised by bond issues $875,000,000 in addition to the initial advance of $125,000,000 from the Government, it is pointed out.

So little modernization has been possible in the past three years, the league president further pointed out, that 75 per cent is a very conservative estimate on the homes now out of date. With this in mind, State conventions of building and loan associations held in many different sections of the country during the past month reached a consensus of opinion that reloaning their Home Loan Banks' borrowings for such projects would be a real contribution toward recovery. Secretaries of State leagues of building and loan associations answering a query put out by the trade publication of the building and loan world would show the same strong leaning.

Reliable figures show that an average of 50 per cent of all money spent for such home repairs as reroofing, painting, improvement of light and ventilation facilities, changing architectural design and exterior arrangements of houses, installing modern air-cooling and insulating devices, and general repairs to cellar, house and attic goes into the purses of the workmen who do the job.

Campaign in 75 Cities.

"Seventy-seven cities of large and moderate size have put on modernizing campaigns with a subsequent reduction of the percentage of their unemployed anywhere from 30 to 50 per cent," says Mr. Whitlock. "The United States Department of Commerce has directed activities in encouragement of these enterprises. It has run against one major difficulty, lack of financing on the part of thousands of home owners who really want to improve the value of their property by modernizing. The Home Loan Bank funds supply the answer.

"Low cost of building materials makes the present the ideal time for all families to go about improving their homes in appearance, and comforts, and therefore in value. Repairs which cost between $500 and $2,500 may be made for $350 to $2,000 today.

"The gain in employment which will result from this financing goes beyond the group of workingmen who would be hired to do the actual repair and modernizing work. The manufacturer of lumber, shingles, masonry materials, plumbing fixtures, electric apparatus, paint and other requisites for making homes more comfortable and attractive will need more men to work for him to fill the orders which pile up. When men have gone back to work again they will be able to buy again, and so the cycle starts on the upgrade with the stimulus it has needed all along, the resumption of employment.

"By using the major part of their Home Loan Bank borrowings for such loans to home owners, the associations will play their part in making the new system a real contributor to recovery, but along the lines of sound economics rather than along the carelessly thought-out lines of direct loans to impoverished families who could not be expected to carry additional credit."

To stimulate this movement they are offering their purchasers unusual values. They plan a home from the ideas of the purchaser and will finance and build it for him on one of their sites at a price in which they have added to the actual cost to them only a fair profit on the land.

Fully Restricted.

A prospective home owner who wishes to know what it would cost him to have a home built from his own plans, may select an available site and have a sketch made and a price quoted without cost or obligation on his part.

The development is unique in that it is fully restricted as to social and architectural requirements, but there are no prohibitive price limitations to bar those otherwise eminently qualified to live in the best environment.

Already more than 30 homes have been projected in sketches for prospective owners, and construction will be started on a number of these upon completion of the street paving work.

LOAN ASSOCIATIONS BIG AID IN CAPITAL

Thousands of Families Have Been Helped to Homes in Last Ten Years.

The building and loan associations of the District of Columbia have helped thousands of families in Washington to own their own homes in the last ten years, according to tabulations completed last week by William S. Quinter, secretary of the Building Association Council.

The amount loaned by the associations for financing these homes is approximately $149,800,000, the secretary said. The money thus made available to home borrowers was invested in the association by local savers, some on the few dollars a month plan and others in lump sums, he explains, and substantial dividends have been paid year in and year out on those investments.

"Between 1920 and 1930 the home ownership percentage of the Nation increased from 44.6 per cent to 46.8 per cent," Mr. Quinter points out. "The actual increase in owned homes during the period was 3,135,004. Building and loan associations financed some 4,346,000 homes during the same period. This comparison points to the fact that building and loan associations, with their long time, monthly repayment mortgage, are doing more and more of the country's home financing. Throughout the decade from 1920 to 1930 a large volume of the home financing which had been done on a straight, short time mortgage basis by other financial institutions and by individual lenders was switched to building and loan financing when the renewal period came due."

"The greatest increase in assets of building and loan associations likewise took place in this prize decade of home ownership. The Washington associations rose from $30,125,125 in 1920 to $75,404,000 in 1930. The total for the country's building and loan associations was $2,519,914,971 at the end of 1920. It was $8,828,611,925 at the end of 1930. The total assets in Washington associations October 31, 1932 were $85,765,598; 454 new loans were made during October, aggregating $1,484,527.

"The ownership of homes and the increase in permanent wealth of cities has benefited vastly from this growth. Every dollar that the building associations have loaned to home owners has gone to create the kind of wealth which makes for permanent roots of civic pride, homes, yards and the city's developments in education and culture, all of which depend in the main upon a home-owning citizenry whose future interests as well as its present concerns are tied up with Washington, D. C."

Sales Conferences Assist Realty Men

National Association Aids by Describing Livest Ideas and Plans.

Sales conferences, held through cooperation of the National Association of Real Estate Boards with the various State real estate associations and with its local member boards, are bringing the livest plans and ideas, wherever developed, directly to the service of local real estate men in each city where the conferences are held. The meetings are all-day informal concrete discussions of how recent sales were made, and the conductor, the association's sales counselor, A. John Berge.

Six State real estate conventions this fall included a national association sales conference as part of the program. They were Massachusetts, Oklahoma, Michigan, Iowa, Pennsylvania and North Carolina. Fall conferences on real estate sales were held also in Terre Haute, St. Louis, Cleveland, Baltimore, Washington, Norfolk and Richmond.

Twenty-one cities were given such method round tables in May, June and July. The schedule ahead is: November 21, Oak Park, Ill.; December 7, Uniontown, Pa.; December 8 and 9, Atlantic City, N. J., and December 15 and 16, Atlanta, Ga.

WHY MIKKELSON'S NEW HOUSE IS ALL Gas

Model, all-gas home built by G. F. Mikkelson & Son at 6307 Hillcrest Place, Beechwood, Chevy Chase. To see it drive out Connecticut Ave. to Thornapple St., turn left two blocks to Beechwood Drive and left again to the house. For further information, call the builder at Wisconsin 4255 or Wisconsin 3323.

On Hillcrest Place, in beautiful Beechwood, G. F. Mikkelson & Son have just opened a new model home.

It is an All-Gas home—equipped with Automatic Gas Heat, gas-operated refrigerator, modern insulated gas range, and automatic gas water heater.

Gas equipment was selected because Mikkelson has found that the public demands it. The great majority of Beechwood homes are all-gas homes—modern gas appliances have played their part in the popularity of Beechwood, where demand for houses always exceeds the supply.

This latest model home is a beautiful New England Colonial of seven large rooms and a recreation room in the basement. The modern kitchen alone is well worth a visit, with its scientific arrangement and its cabinets, woodwork, gas range and gas refrigerator all in harmonizing ivory and green.

The house is open to visitors every day. See it, for design, setting and equipment all unite to make it an exhibition of modern living at its best.

Stocks Renew Advances In Spite of Listless Trading

Average Gains Nine-tenths as Half-Day Sales Drop to 385,556 Shares.

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—For the first time this week, stocks squeezed through with average net gains today, although it was still a very sleepy market.

Early unsettlement passed away before the session was an hour old and in the later trading enough shorts covered to bring a placid advance. Some stocks finished with gains of 1 to 2 points, although in many instances the rise was only fractional. Turnover amounted to 385,556 shares.

The firmer closing tone to security markets here may have had something to do with a spurt in Chicago wheat, which improved more than a cent a bushel. Cotton was a little heavy.

U. S. Steel and American Telephone were fairly popular with stock buyers toward the close, showing respective net gains of 1 and 2 points. American Can, Case, United Aircraft, Consolidated Gas, Drug, Allied Chemical, Eastman, New York Central, Santa Fe and Union Pacific did as well or slightly better. McIntyre Porcupine jiggled up more than a point.

Once more the rail section was able to ignore a larger than seasonal drop in carloadings. Traffic moved last week proved to be 51,290 cars less than in the preceding period. The recent interval included election day, when some curtailment of activity is normal, but the recession was more extensive, on a percentage basis, than in recent years. Less-than-carload lots were down about 7,200 cars.

Sidelights on trade at the week-end were scarcely prominent enough to command attention. Automobile manufacturers will soon be bringing out new models, featuring lower-priced lines. The extent of production depends, of course, on the public's response to their wares.

Stocks.

An average gain of nine-tenths of a point was recorded in spite of a very sleepy half-day session. The turnover dropped to 385,556 shares. Short covering near the closing assisted in the placid advance. United States Steel and phone shares were popular with buyers and showed gains of 1 and 2 points, respectively.

Bonds.

Despite strength shown by high-grade loans, bonds sagged one-tenth of a point in one of the year's dullest short sessions. Sales totaled only $3,648,000. The rail section displayed easier tendencies. Gilt-edged issues advanced fractionally.

Curb.

The market lifted slightly in quiet trading. Gains were mostly fractional. Short session sales dwindled to 60,000 shares, against 120,000 last Saturday. Aluminum gained 2 points. United Light & Power "A" closed a shade lower. Great Atlantic & Pacific stores slid back 6 points. Oil stocks were neglected.

Wheat.

Wet harvest reports from Argentina and big purchases of North American wheat for export sent prices up ⅞ to 1¼ cents. Corn and oats also advanced. Provisions were up 2 cents. It was revealed that as much as 2,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat had been bought for overseas shipment, with 1,000,000 bushels more to follow at once. December wheat sold at 43½ to 43¼ cents.

Cotton.

Prices declined moderately, but late trading regained part of the losses. The general market was down 9 to 11 points. March contracts sold at 6.29. December went off to 6.07. Liverpool cables reported hedge seling had been absorbed by trade calling. It was said that Russia expects to export a substantial amount of cotton to other countries.

CURB PRICES HIGHER IN QUIETER TRADING

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Curb Market lifted slightly today in quiet trading. Transfers totaled 60,000 shares, against 120,000 last Saturday.

Price changes were mostly fractional. Aluminum Co. gained more than 2. Great Atlantic & Pacific slid 6 points in odd-lot trading, losing yesterday's gain. But elsewhere stocks moved in a restricted orbit.

Electric Bond & Share rallied a fraction. Cities Service gained a little, while United Light & Power "A" closed a shade lower. American Superpower and American Gas & Electric were steady.

The oil stocks, which have shown considerable steadiness as a result of Eastern gasoline price advances, were neglected today. Standard of Indiana and Standard of Kentucky both lost a fraction, but other leaders were not actively traded.

New Jersey Zinc was down about a point. Deere & Co. was about steady at a shade under yesterday's close.

Guaranty Trust Orders Payless Day Vacations

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, announced today that it had asked all employes to take a vacation of one day a month without pay, and officers two days a month under similar circumstances, to aid in the share-the-work movement.

The savings thus effected will be used "to assist financially those employes who through misfortune are in circumstances threatening their health and happiness, which are so essential to satisfactory service; to help further the local situation through giving temporary employment to a limited number of men and women, preferably former employes," and "to carry excess employes." This was announced in a letter from W. C. Potter, president, to Walter C. Teagle, chairman of the share-the-work committee.

Export of Cotton Yarn Up in First Nine Months

(Associated Press.)

Exports of cotton yarns from the United States increased from 10,954,000 pounds in the first nine months of 1931 to 12,075,000 pounds in the corresponding period of this year, but lower values brought only $3,581,000 as compared to $5,070,000 in 1931.

The textile division of the Commerce Department, which announced the figures, said Argentina continued as the leading export outlet for American cotton yarns, purchasing 4,295,000 pounds in the nine months of this year as compared to 3,409,000 pounds in the same period of 1931.

U. S. Copper May Take Part in Curb Parley

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—American copper producers it was said yesterday in trade circles would likely take but a passive part in the early stages of the forthcoming conference of world producers to discuss curtailment.

Trade interests say that our import tariff of 4 cents a pound precludes active American participation in the parley until the European producers have had an opportunity to survey the situation as it affects them in world markets.

Largest Favorable Balance Of Trade Made in October

(Associated Press.)

The largest favorable trade balance for any month of the present year was announced yesterday by the Commerce Department, which said exports in October amounted to $153,000,000, while imports were $106,000,000. In September the exports were $132,025,000 and imports $98,412,000.

For the ten months of the fiscal year there has been a favorable trade balance of $220,215,000, exports having totaled $1,341,915,000 and imports $1,121,700,000. The balance was $39,000,000 less than for the same period of last year when imports totaled $2,046,680,000 and imports $1,787,382,000.

While the report was based on preliminary figures it was said at the department that a general picking up in all lines of business was indicated as cotton shipments provided only $7,000,000 of the increase.

In September cotton exports totaled $22,000,000 while in October, they amounted to $39,000,000.

The report showed that the United States gained $20,617,000 of gold in the month, having imported $20,674,000 and having exported only $57,000. For the ten months of the year gold exports exceeded imports by $568,808,000, totaling $809,495,000 against $240,687,000.

During October this country exported $11,000 more silver than it imported with a total outgo of $1,316,000, and total imports of $1,305,000. For the ten months of the year silver exports have been $5,238,000 less than the imports which amounted to $16,983,000.

Currency Backed Heavily With Gold

U. S. Puts 75 Per Cent Behind Money; Only 40 Required.

(Associated Press.)

Federal Reserve Banks of the country are backing their $2,925,250,000 of currency in circulation with more than 75 per cent gold, though the law requires only 40 per cent gold to secure the system's money. Latest Treasury records show that Federal Reserve Banks have deposited with Federal Reserve agents and the Treasury a total of $2,241,169,000 in gold to secure its note circulation.

This huge gold reserve against the circulation, while not the largest on record, remains despite enactment of the Glass-Steagall law which permits the banks, under certain conditions, to substitute Government securities for the 60 per cent eligible paper required in addition to the minimum of 40 per cent gold to pledge reserve banks currency.

The banks, however, have taken advantage of the Glass-Steagall act to the extent of replacing eligible paper with $423,300,000 of Government securities. They have $290,799,000 of eligible paper deposited against the circulation. The banks at one time early in the year had approximately 90 per cent of their circulation backed by gold. Shortly after this the Glass-Stagall law was passed to permit the banks to draw down needed gold, if the occasion arose and the Federal Reserve Board approved. It provided the banks with a reservoir from which they could replenish stocks of free gold that could be paid out over the counter.

Receivers Sought On Associated Gas

Former Washington Man Charges Mismanaging; Asks Accounting.

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Charging mismanagement of the funds of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., Philip Newbold, a stockholder and former Washington, D. C., attorney, filed a motion in supreme court today asking that a temporary receiver be appointed pending determination of his suit for an accounting. The Associated Gas & Electric Co. is a billion dollar public utilities holding corporation operating throughout this country and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Newbold mentioned as codefendants with Associated Gas & Electric nine officers of the company, including one woman, the Utility Management Corporation, formerly known as the J. G. White Management Corporation; W. S. Barstow & Co., Inc., Utilities Purchasing & Supply Corporation, Public Utilities Appliance Corporation, H. C. Hopson & Co., Inc., and Daniel Starch, in business as Daniel Starch & Staff, advertising agents. Mr. Newbold, now a felt manufacturer here, owns 100 shares of class A preferred stock of Associated Gas & Electric. His attorney said he bought it two years ago at $60 a share and that it is now quoted on the Curb Exchange at about $2.

Mr. Newbold charged that the company has been grossly mismanaged by Howard C. Hopson, vice president, treasurer and director of the company, who is one of the defendants. He asserted Hopson dominated the company and managed it through "dummy" directors. The alleged mismanagement lies in six contracts Hopson is said, in the motion, to have made with six other organizations, in which Newbold said Hopson has influence, to manage and otherwise take care of the company's business. Newbold charged that these six companies drew excessive and illegal fees. He asserted that the alleged mismanagement had seriously affected the credit of the company, making it difficult to carry on refinancing. He said the company now needs $18,000,000 to take up some short term notes. The six companies with which Hopson is alleged to have made contracts are the six mentioned as codefendants with Associated Gas & Electric.

BONDS SINK LOWER IN DULLER SESSION

One-Tenth Loss Is Recorded as Turnover Sags to $3,648,000.

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Aside from the quiet strength displayed by highest grade investment loans, the trend of the bond market was irregularly lower today.

It was one of the dullest sessions of the year, sales totaling only $3,648,000, with the majority of transactions involving less than 10 bonds. The Associated Press-Standard Statistics average for 60 domestic corporate issues relaxed one-tenth of a point.

The railroad section exhibited an easy tendency in response to the freight car loadings report for the week ended November 12, which showed a decline of more than 50,000, a somewhat greater than seasonal falling off in traffic.

While most of the semispeculative groups were inclined to dip, several "gilt edge" obligations either duplicated their previous top marks or advanced fractionally to new highs for the year. Among these were some maturities of American Telephone, Consolidated Gas, Humble Oil, Brooklyn Union Gas and Bangor & Aroostook Railway. Many other similar loans were either unchanged or a bit higher.

Secondary rail liens that eased included some of Baltimore & Ohio, Canadian National, Denver & Rio Grande, New York Central, Nickel Plate, Pere Marquette and Southern Pacific.

International Telephone convertible 4½s had a sinking spell, losing more than 3 points at one time, although they later rallied for a net loss of 2. Western Unions and Postal Telegraphs were off mildly. Bonds of Detroit Edison, Laclede Gas, Metropolitan Edison, New Jersey Power and Kansas Gas firmed. Pacific Public Service 5s lost 15⅜ points when the Pacific Gas merger apparently was abandoned. Moderate gains and losses among the industrials were about even.

Foreign and United States Government loans were mixed and extremely dull. Small gains were recorded by some of the Germans, Cubans and Japanese.

Freight Loadings Drop 51,290 Cars

(Associated Press.)

The American Railway Association yesterday placed car loadings of revenue freight for the week ended November 12 at 537,093, a decrease of 51,290 under the preceding week.

This was a decrease of 152,867 under the same week in 1931 and 291,930 under the same week two years ago.

Miscellaneous freight loaded during the week ended November 12 was 187,249 cars, decrease 22,898 under the preceding week and 64,083 under the same week last year; less than carlot merchandise, 169,908, decrease 7,287 and 37,556; coal, 113,606, decrease 11,160 and 16,867; live stock, 18,357, decrease 1,356 and 9,330; grain and grain products, 25,090, decrease 4,773 and 12,893; forest products, 15,984, decrease 1,432 and 6,887; ore, 2,795, decrease 1,489 and 3,819; coke, 4,104, decrease 895 and 1,532.

New Franco-American Money Transfers Start

Paris, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Money up to the value of $100 can henceforth be transferred by mail from France to the United States and vice versa by a new Franco-American money order postal convention promulgated in the official journal today.

The convention was signed in Washington on August 19, 1931, and will replace old conventions negotiated as far back as 1879 and 1888.

8 Film Companies Sued for $100,000

Newark Amusement Concern Charges Conspiracy in Trade Restraint.

Newark, N. J., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Eight of the country's largest film companies were named defendants today in a $100,000 damage suit filed in Federal Court by the Clinton Amusement Corporation, of Newark. The suit was filed under the Clayton antitrust act, and charges the eight moving picture concerns with damaging the plaintiff's business "by an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade."

The companies named as defendants were Warner Bros., Inc.; Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.; Universal Film Exchange, Inc.; United Artists Corporation; Fox Film Corporation; R. K. O. Distributors Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation, and the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc.

The complaint charged that the plaintiff together with other independents had been forced by the alleged combine to pay first-run prices for second-run pictures. It also alleged that the defendant companies owned and controlled 75 per cent of all film productions distributed in New Jersey and 90 per cent of all feature films distributed in the State.

COTTON LOSS IS CUT IN CLOSING DEALINGS

March Closes at 6.29 as General Market Drops 9 to 11 Points.

March contracts, after selling off to 6.23, or 15 points net lower, rallied to 6.34 and closed at 6.29. The final tone of the market was steady at net declines of 9 to 11 points.

The early weakness was attributed to more active selling by the South and liquidation promoted by rather disappointing Liverpool cables. First prices were 7 to 9 points lower but a moderate demand from the trade, which again included a little buying through brokers with Japanese connections, was quite readily supplied and pressure increased as the decline brought out additional liquidation.

December Sells at 6.07.

December sold off to 6.07 and May to 6.34, making net losses of 14 to 16 points on active positions. The market then steadied on continued trade buying and week-end covering. December worked up to 6.18 and May to 6.44, within 3 or 4 points of yesterday's closing quotations, but there was some further liquidation and closing prices showed reactions of 4 or 5 points from the best.

Liverpool cables said that hedge selling in that market had been absorbed by trade calling and reported an encouraging turnover in cotton cloths with more looms working in Manchester. European advices to the New York Cotton Exchange said that Russia is likely to export a substantial amount of cotton to other countries of the continent and to England during the current season, it is understood, according to this authority, that Russia is prepared to sell 75,000 to 100,000 bales to England and 50,000 or more to the continent, referring to 400-pound bales. The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance from United States ports at the end of the week was estimated at 150,000 bales, against 185,000 last year.

Cotton Goods Demand Weak.

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Cotton goods markets were slow today. Broad silk and wool goods mills are showing spring lines and report that buyers are actively sampling the new offerings. Mills in the meantime are curtailing operations pending receipt of orders for the coming season. All types of 100 denier rayon yarns are selling in heavy volume. Burlap was quiet and unchanged.

WHEAT VALUES GAIN ON HARVEST REPORT

Wet Weather and Pick-Up in Export Demand Send Prices Higher.

Chicago, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Jerked upward by wet harvest reports from Argentina and by big purchases of North American wheat for Europe, grain markets developed notable strength today.

For a moment at the start, wheat prices hovered within ⅛ cent of the all-time bottom record, and then climbed straight aloft, with latest dealings at the day's top level. Trade leaders expressed opinions that liquidation of December wheat contracts would hereafter be of less volume than had generally been feared.

Wheat closed firm, ⅞ to 1¼ above yesterday's finish; corn, ¼ to ½ up; oats, ⅛ to ¼ advanced, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 2 cents.

Canadian Wheat Bought.

Check-up revealed that as much as 2,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat had been bought for shipment overseas and that 1,000,000 bushels more were taken today. Outright liquidation of Chicago December wheat contracts showed decided curtailment, and there was talk in some quarters that unusual selling pressure from this source was virtually at an end. Meanwhile, persistent drought reports concerning domestic winter crop territory Southwest and West received increasing attention, the weekly forecast giving but little promise of moisture and indicating wide swings of temperature.

A particular point stressed was that at below 50 cents a bushel for July contracts, representing next season's domestic wheat crop, the market was at a debatable level when December liquidation had culminated. The fact that prices had hit within ⅛ cent of the historic low point served also to increase buying. It was generally deemed significant likewise that for the second successive day the Liverpool market ignored declines in prices on this side of the Atlantic.

Corn and oats followed the action of wheat. There were intimations of some export business in corn.

Provisions reflected steadiness of the hog market.

Township Eliminates Its Tax for One Year

A township tax cut may be a national story. Here's one such that comes to the National Association of Real Estate Boards from the Battle Creek, Mich., realty board. Battle Creek township has completely eliminated its township tax for the fiscal year 1932-1933. This takes off $5.40 per $1,000 assessed valuation from the township residents' tax bills. The total saving in the one township is $42,784.14.

Cuts already made in school and in State taxes and foreshadowed in county taxes mean for Lakeview school district, Battle Creek township, this year, a total tax cut of 27.6 per cent.

Location of Postal Structure Cleared

Historic House in Culpeper Was Headquarters of Gen. Grant.

Special to The Washington Post.

Culpeper, Va., Nov. 19.—Demolition of the Russell Smith house on North Main street has been completed, preparatory to constructing the new $50,000 postoffice building to be built by Rosen & Fischel, Inc., Chicago contractors.

The work is going forward under the supervision of Rudolph Loss, who will remain in Culpeper during the entire construction. Excavation on the new site started before they had finished clearing away the debris of the old colonial house, which was Gen. Grant's headquarters while in this section during the Civil War. Mr. Loss stated that the building should be completed in about six months of permissable working weather.

About twenty men are now employed in the demolition of the old house and the clearing away of numerous trees and the start of excavation. Of these men all are local men, with the exception of Mr. Loss, the superintendent, and his assistant. Mr. Loss stated that all subcontracts, including plumbing and heating, electrical wiring, painting, &c., will be let to general contractors, with local firms being given the preference, and that all labor, so far as possible, would be local labor.

Toronto Coeds Set Up Shops to Beat Slump

Toronto, Ontario, (U.P.).—Coeds at the University of Toronto, who have obtained employment in order to pay their college fees, to lessen the strain of the family budget, or to raise "pin money" for themselves, have formed a club and are calling themselves the Free Lances.

In many of the women's dormitories the Free Lances have set up wardrobe shops and beauty parlors and report that business is good.

Other students have obtained employment as theater ushers, checkroom clerks, stenographers and nurse maids.

Former Student Trails Bees to Their Swarms

Monmouth, Oreg. (U.P.).—Elton Fishback, former student of Oregon Normal School, spent the summer locating bee trees, taking the honey and the bees. He found 17 swarms by watching the direction bees took from water and locating the tree around which the bees were swarming, by using binoculars.

He sometimes found two swarms in a single tree. In one tree two swarms were living in apparent harmony, with no line of demarcation visible between quarters.

Newspaper Contains Washington's Ad

Memphis (U.P.).—Yellowed with age and folded away with care, a newspaper possessed by Idel Miller contains an advertisment inserted by George Washington, himself.

It is an August 20, 1773, edition of the Maryland Journal and Baltimore Advertiser, which boasts it contains "the freshest advices, both foreign and domestic."

George Washington's ad dealt with 20,000 acres of land he had just acquired "on the Ohio and Great Kahnawa." He proposes to divide it.

Odd Reason Cited For Death of Ducks

Petersburg, Ind. (U.P.).—Hunters here offer their own explanation for the death of 17 wild ducks found on a State road near Petersburg.

Moonbeams, shining through a mist, gave the concrete highway a glare resembling water. The ducks, hunters say, dived into the road, thinking it was a stream.

Dirigible Service Soon Across South Atlantic

Weekly Year-Round Trips Are Planned by Dr. Eckener Between Germany and Rio de Janeiro.

Rio de Janeiro (A.P.).—First regular dirigible and airplane service across the South Atlantic appears only a matter of months, according to German airmen fostering the ventures.

Dr. Hugo Eckener, commander of the Graf Zeppelin, which has crossed the Atlantic more than twenty times, plans weekly year-round dirigible service between Friedrichshafen and Rio de Janeiro.

The German Lufthansa Co. says Fritz Hammer, a director of the German Condor Syndicate here, plans transatlantic airplane mail service to Brazil by utilizing an anchored ship in midocean for refueling.

Success of the Graf Zeppelin's transatlantic flights this year and last caused Dr. Eckener to start negotiations for formation of a Brazilian subsidiary company to build a mooring mast and hangar in Rio.

Under this plan two dirigibles would cross the Atlantic in a weekly air liner service, carrying passengers, freight and mails. Rio was chosen for the terminus instead of Pernambuco because of its central location and its connections with Buenos Aires and the Pacific Coast, the latter via Matta Grosso and Bolivia.

Such service would make it possible for mail or passengers from Europe to reach Santiago, Chile, or Lima, Peru, in days instead of weeks.

The Graf's ten flights this year, which have become steady, routine performances, have been successful from a mail standpoint despite long waits between voyages, said Dr. Eckener. On most of the flights 40,000 or more pieces of mail have been carried. Passengers have averaged a dozen. Flying time to Pernambuco has averaged 70 hours, and the return crossing under 90 hours.

Even quicker service would be provided under the Lufthansa's projected heavier than air mail line, which would give the Germans a decided advantage over the present French air-mail service, which uses fast ships for transport between Africa and Brazil.

Hammer, who flew the giant DO-X airplane from Rio to New York in 1931, said that only final experiments stand between installation of the mid-ocean refueling ship and initiation of service.

For lack of an island in mid-ocean, Lufthansa plans to anchor the 6,000-ton ship Westphalen, remodeled as a floating airport.

It is likely, said Hammer, that catapults, considerably larger than those used on the German liners Bremen and Europa, will be utilized to send off the airplanes from the Westphalen after refueling.

The transatlantic planes will probably weigh from ten to eleven tons each.

Horseshoe May Prove Truth of History

Memphis (U.P.).—A handwrought horseshoe, embedded in the heart of an oak tree may prove that Hernando de Soto saw the Mississippi for the first time on the Chickasaw Bluffs, at Memphis.

At least John B. Jarrett, of Holly Springs, Miss., believes that is what a horseshoe he found in a tree on his plantation proves.

The oak tree in which the shoe was found has more than 400 rings, Jarrett says, indicating the age of the tree at about 400 years.

According to Jarrett De Soto's soldiers are the only ones who could have left behind such a memento, as the Indians had neither horses nor iron from which to make horseshoes.

Farmer Backs Up Large-Family Theory

Henning, Tenn. (U.P.).—So firmly does W. C. Ammons, farmer, believe in his theory that large families are the happiest that he has reared 29 children of his own and has adopted two others.

"I am proud of every one of my 31 children," he declares. "Not a one caused me a moment's trouble. This talk about birth control is a lot of stuff and nonsense, for the happiest homes are those that are blessed with the largest number of children."

The 77-year-old farmer has been married three times. His first wife presented him with thirteen children and to his second union 11 children were born. Thus far he has had five children by his present wife.

BEAUTY HAS MARITAL TROUBLES

The Argentine beauty, Pilar Ramos, wife of the boxer, Justo Suarez, has been sued by her husband for divorce and has filed a countersuit of her own. Suarez, Argentina's best fighter since Firpo, made an unsuccessful bid for the lightweight title in the United States in 1931. His marital troubles started when his mother sued him for nonsupport, claiming he was giving his wife all of his money.

$20,000,000 SOUGHT BY CHEROKEE INDIAN

Oklahoma City (A.P.). — Alleged broken promises of "the great white father" figure in claims of the Cherokee Indians for nearly $20,000,000 from the United States Government, Former Senator Robert L. Owen, special attorney for the tribe, explained the litigation here.

The suit, recently filed in the United States Court of Claims, alleges the Government has neglected to pay for 3,700,000 acres in "no man's land" of the Oklahoma Panhandle, taken by white settlers in 1866. The land comprises the Cherokee outlet west of the 100th meridian, the strip having been set aside by treaty to provide the Cherokees an outlet to the hunting grounds of the West.

Owen's great grandfather, John D. Chisholm, a Scotsman, but chief of the Cherokees, signed the treaty on which the tribe seeks to recover about $4,625,000.

Other claims seek about $900,000 as interest alleged due the Western Cherokees for money in the United States Treasury; $4,000,000 due the Eastern Cherokees on the same grounds; about $6,000,000 due both branches for property the Government required them to give their freed Negro slaves, and about $4,000,000 in a "new born baby" suit. The last action involves about 5,000 tribesmen, the tribal rolls having been closed in 1902.

Rail Workers Combine To Fight Truckmen

Harrisburg, Pa. (U.P.). — Railroad workers of central Pennsylvania have organized to combat the truck competition that they claim is costing many of them their jobs.

In Northumberland County, 3,000 workers formed the Citizens' Railroad Protective Association of Northumberland County and announced their purpose to be "to voice emphatic protest against wildcat transportation on the public highways."

At Altoona, an important railroad center, the workers called themselves the Railroad Employes and Taxpayers Association, formed, they said, to protest unregulated truck and bus traffic in Pennsylvania.

19,000 Books Given To U. of P. Library

Gift of Dr. Burr Is Largest Institution Has Ever Received.

Philadelphia (U.P.). — More than 19,000 volumes, comprising what is believed to be the largest single gift of books ever received by the University of Pennsylvania Library, have been presented by Dr. Charles W. Burr, according to Thomas S. Gates, university president.

All the books were chosen from his own library by Dr. Burr, who is a distinguished physician, an associate member of the university trustees' board of graduate education and research, professor of neuropsychiatry in the Graduate School of Medicine at the university and emeritus professor of mental diseases.

The gift, which brings the number of volumes in the university's library to approximately 770,000, was made without any restrictions, Dr. Burr's only request being that the books be catalogued and made available for use as rapidly as possible. Books considered most worthwhile in nearly all classes of literature—history, travel, biography, poetry, drama and standard fiction—comprise the bulk of Dr. Burr's gift, but it also includes a number of small collections, among which is a noteworthy assortment of books on spiritualism and witchcraft.

Distinguished Names on New Week's Screen Roster

ON MISS BARRYMORE AND THANKSGIVING'S PROMISE

By NELSON B. BELL

HAVING abandoned the experimental extravagances of such ill-judged vehicles as Mrs. Peterkin's "Scarlet Sister Mary" and divorced her artistic endeavors from such honorable, but completely familiar, revivals as "The School for Scandal," Miss Ethel Barrymore inspires the most eager anticipation of her appearance at the National Theater, beginning tomorrow evening, by returning to the local boards in a new, modern and spiritedly sophisticated comedy of a European prima donna, harassed by an intermingling of professional and domestic inclinations that is heralded as uniquely and vivaciously amusing.

With a musical background in her own life that at one time pointed toward a brilliant career on the concert stage, Miss Barrymore approaches her current undertaking with a magnificent personal equipment for the successful discharge of the task in hand. Occupying the distinguished position of the virtually undisputed "first actress" of the American theater, the artiste whose career has been the record of an almost unbroken succession of personal triumphs, since her early accession of stardom in Clyde Fitch's "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," brings to her every present task the combined fruits of a brilliant family inheritance and superlative individual achievement.

Contemplation of her new venture in "Encore," by Victor Wittgenstein and Sheridan Gibney, in which she once more appears under the sponsorship of Arthur Hopkins, therefore can lead into speculative channels only by passing on to consideration of those by whom Miss Barrymore is surrounded in her new season's endeavor.

Even here the evidence is all on the side of a preeminently proficient personnel and a consequent assured competence and artistry.

• • • •

AS one gives thought to Miss Barrymore's recent return from Hollywood's manufactories of drama embalmed in celluloid, it is not difficult to summon from the past memories of certain of her earlier associates who also attained note before the cameras.

As far back as "Mid-Channel," Miss Barrymore's juvenile leading man was Eugene O'Brien, later to become one of the screen's most popular idols and now apparently passed definitely from the scene of both the living and the gelatine drama.

In her memorable revival of "The Lady of the Camellias," probably the most sumptuous production in recent years of the sturdy old play that this season is being rejuvenated as a provocative subject of discussion by both Miss Eva Le Gallienne, whose "Camille" has recently been viewed in the Capital, and Miss Lillian Gish, whose interpretation of the same famous character has not, Conway Tearle, long a screen luminary, was the Armand Duval opposite Miss Barrymore's Marguerite Gautier.

And so, intermittently, has the record run, down to the present, when Frank Conroy finds himself reclaimed from a threatened permanency in the West Coast studios to assume the post of one of Miss Barrymore's leading men in "Encore."

A completely personal distinction does not accrue to Mr. Conroy by virtue of his present assignment, since "Encore" is reported to be profligate in its requirement of leading men. Four are pressed into service to meet the needs of Miss Barrymore's dissection of a diva's domestic deportment. Each presumably has a scrapbook pasted tight with commendatory notices for intricate and worthy public accomplishments.

IT must inevitably come to one's attention in conversation with Mr. David Wallace, personally representing Mr. Hopkins, that the Siegfried Rumann, who is retained as one of the star's mainstays in the new play, is the German actor who achieved fame by his portrayal of Kringelein in "Grand Hotel"—by an odd coincidence the role Miss Barrymore's brother, Lionel, assumed with such triumphant success upon the silver sheet—when the Vicki Baum play was in its prime on Broadway, but even before that he had been discovered by Mr. Hopkins and had played for him in "The Channel Road" and "Half Gods."

Mr. Rumann was born in Hamburg and went on the stage there. He had played in four different state theaters and acquired some prominence when the war broke out and he went into service, becoming a lieutenant with the Fourth Royal Saxony Regiment of heavy artillery. He emerged with minor wounds and various decorations and promptly came to this country to play with German companies while he studied the English language. His first part in English was in the short-lived "War Song," when Arthur Hopkins saw him and promptly employed him in two productions.

FRANK CONROY, second of the quartet of leading men, appeared on Broadway last spring with Fay Bainter in "The Man Who Changed His Name." Prior to that, as already vaguely intimated, he had spent a year in various Hollywood studios.

He will be remembered by many who keep abreast of such things as importantly cast in three New York Theater Guild productions, "Wings Over Europe," "The Game of Love and Death" and "Karl and Anna."

By this process of retrospection we come to his appearance with Miss Barrymore throughout her long engagement in "The Constant Wife" and, slightly earlier, under the Hopkins management in "Daddy's Gone A-Hunting."

Born in England, he came to this country to appear in Chesterton's play of "Magic" and then joined the Washington Square Players in New York.

• • • •

SEBASTIAN BRAGGIOTTI and Alfred A. Hesse complete the supporting quadrangle of "Encore."

Mr. Braggiotti was born in Florence, Italy, and came to America with his parents and equally precocious brothers and sisters when very young. Two sisters, Francesca and Gloria, became known both as dancers and actresses in Boston and New York, the latter having appeared in "Lysistrata." Francesca, who married John Davis Lodge, son of the late senator, Henry Cabot Lodge, is now in Hollywood.

Mario Braggiotti, renowned as a pianist, was heard in Washington last winter on the single Sunday night program given in the National Theater by Maurice Chevalier.

Sebastian, in the meantime, has made his own way through stock training and Hollywood, where he made a picture with Gloria Swanson, "What a Widow," returning, eventually, to Broadway to be seen with Mary Nash in "The Woman Denied" and with Katharine Cornell in "Dishonored Lady."

Mr. Hesse, also a Barrymore alumnus, was in "The Left Bank" all last season in New York and had previously played in "Young Sinners," "Twelve Miles Out," "Upstairs and Down" and in his present star's production of "Declasse."

Born in Brussels, Mr. Hesse was educated in Belgium and France and began his career as a writer, first in French but soon also, in English. It is perhaps as a recrudescence of his earlier inclination that after playing in "Ready Money" and with Elsie Ferguson in "The First Lady of the Land," he became known as coauthor of "Little Miss Bluebeard," as adapted from the original Hungarian for the stellar uses of Irene Bordoni, and also of "The Maid of Athens."

It is an augury of a rare evening in the theater that all of these diverse talents have been assembled by Mr. Hopkins for the support of an actress whose professional enterprises are never devoid either of significance or interest.

Many Old Dogs, It Seems, Do Learn a New Trick or Two

Screen directors, in many cases, reached their profession over a tortuous route. In the ranks of Hollywood's leading megaphone wielders are many who come from professions where one would least expect to find directorial genius.

Sam Wood, directing Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in "Prosperity" at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, for instance, was a real estate agent before he gave up subdivisions for celluloid.

Charles F. Riesner, director of "Caught Short," "Divorce in the Family," and other hits, started out as a prize fighter. This led to a vaudeville engagement and eventually to pictures.

Another graduate from the vaudeville stage is Harry Beaumont, who directed Robert Montgomery and Tallulah Bankhead in "Faithless." Beaumont was for years a comedy headliner in the varieties.

Clarence Brown, director of "Emma," "Letty Lynton" and other hits, was an engineer, engaged in automobile designing, before the screen opened a path to fame. Tod Browning, famous director of such mysteries as "Dracula" and "The Unholy Three," started his career as a circus barker—incidentally Wallace Beery was an elephant keeper in the same show. George Hill, director of "Hell Divers," was a cameraman. Robert Z. Leonard, who directed "Strange Interlude," was a musical comedy barytone. Edward Sedgwick, who directed Buster Keaton in "Speak Easily," has been newspaperman, Army officer and minstrel man on the stage.

Charles Brabin, director of "The Mask of Fu Manchu," started in the wholesale grocery business in England—then went on the stage, and thus to pictures.

Sally Blane for Role With Scott

Due to enthusiasm over her work opposite Randolph Scott in Zane Grey's "Heritage of the Desert," just completed, Paramount executives have signed Sally Blane for the feminine lead in "Wild Horse Mesa," a second Zane Grey novel scheduled for early production.

In "Wild Horse Mesa" Miss Blane again will appear opposite Scott.

Camera work is to be started by Director Henry Hathaway as soon as Scott completes his work in "Hot Saturday," now in production.

Young Swim Champ Becomes Lion Man

Buster Crabbe, member of the Olympic swimming team of 1928 and 1932, has been selected by Paramount for the featured role of the Lion Man in "King of the Jungle."

Crabbe, who holds 5 world swimming records and 35 national championships, graduated last January from the University of Southern California.

He was selected for the part after tests had been made of scores of outstanding athletes throughout the country.

A Gifted Director Returns to States

Rouben Mamoulian, director of Maurice Chevalier's "Love Me Tonight" and many other Paramount successes, arrived in New York from Europe last Thursday.

The director, who has been absent from America for two months, will spend several days in the East before departing for Hollywood to begin his next picture, the title for which has not yet been announced.

First Double.

A rattlesnake was the first double ever used in a motion picture. Cecil B. DeMille, who is directing "The Sign of the Cross" for Paramount, relates the incident, which made motion-picture history.

"It was while I was filming 'The Virginian' in 1914," he says. "The script provided that a rattlesnake be shot. The one that had been working in the picture was a beauty, and the players demurred at his execution. So property men went into the desert and rounded up a 'double' to be put on the spot."

Thus the idea was born to save good troupers for future use.

Travel.

Travis Banton, stylist, returned to America November 1, after having spent two months in Europe's fashion centers.

Joseph L. Mankiewicz, scenarist, now working with Claude Binyon on the screen play for "College Humor," made a special trip from Hollywood to attend the Columbia-Cornell football game last Saturday in order to collect local color. He is a graduate of Columbia.

Oldest Actress.

The oldest active player in pictures, Ruby Lafayette, is appearing in "If I Had a Million." She is 89 years old and enjoys her work immensely. She has been before the public for 70 years.

Real Sports.

"Madison Square Garden," the picture which Charles R. Rogers produced, contains actual scenes of a thrilling hockey match, an ice carnival, a six-day bicycle race, an indoor circus and a society ball.

Real Antiques.

On Vacation.

Herbert Marshall, Miriam Hopkins in "Trouble in Paradise" —Earle.

Will Rogers in "Too Busy to Work" —Loew's Fox.

Fay Wray, Joel McCrea in "The Most Dangerous Game" —RKO-Keith's.

Polly Moran, Marie Dressler in "Prosperity" —Palace.

Sidney Fox, Eric Linden in "Afraid to Talk" —Rialto.

Paul Muni in "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang" —Metropolitan.

The Warden's Book Has Been Shot as A Cell-uloid Play

"Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing," adapted from the recent book of Warden Lewis E. Lawes, has just finished shooting at the West Coast studios of First National, according to latest news from the production front.

Michael Curtiz has directed the film and the screen adaptation was made by Courtenay Terrett and Robert Lord.

Popular Novelist Crowds the Bible

Only the Bible exceeds Zane Grey's popular novels in numbers of copies sold over a period of the past fifteen years, it was discovered in Hollywood studios, where his famous book, "Heritage of the Desert," is being filmed.

The Bible, with its world-wide sale and constant renewals for church use, stands alone in volume of sales, but no other work or aggregation of works, fiction or nonfiction, approaches Grey's record for sales in original and reprint editions. "Heritage of the Desert," which was his first novel, continues to lead the list of his older works.

"While Grey's works have outdoor locale, chiefly Western desert and mountain backgrounds, they have the unique distinction of being stories so strong in plot, so virile and definite in characterization, that they are independent of their setting," one critic has written. "Probably his great popularity is due to the fact that his stories have a universal quality and appeal, and could as effectively have been staged in tropical jungles, on the rolling desert of the sea, or on the steppes and frozen tundra of Russia. He writes of the Western desert simply because he knows it and loves it."

Grey's 22 novels and hundreds of sports articles have been written laboriously in longhand, with a pencil, on tablet paper. Grey has a worn cobbler's lapboard which he uses as a desk, placing it across the arms of a chair. All of his novels have been written on it, and he could not be induced to part with it. The longhand manuscripts of his novels, done up in bundles and tied with string, are in storage. He writes a legible hand which the typists who copy his work have no difficulty in deciphering.

Grey holds the remarkable distinction of having had all of his books filmed. Not only that. All the pictures were successful.

Kate Leaves East To Make Pictures

Immediately after she completed her broadcast Wednesday night, Kate Smith left New York for Hollywood to begin work in Paramount's picture, "Moon Song."

Production of "Moon Song" will start immediately.

Beware!

Never look your son-in-law in the face or you will be stricken blind. This odd Indian belief was discovered when Paramount was filming scenes of a group of Indians for Zane Grey's "Wild Horse Mesa."

The scene showed 300 Indians, and as Director Henry Hathaway was lining them up for a shot he discovered one Indian squaw in the foreground who kept her face covered with a blanket. Hathaway demanded that the woman remove the covering, but she refused. Then Jim Thorpe, the Indian football star, explained. The woman's son-in-law was in the direct line of her vision and she feared to look at him, believing she would be blinded.

Contract Awaits.

There have been many actors cradled backstage who made their professional debuts at an early age. However, all records go to an actor who has been hired before he, or she, is born. "Lotus," hippopotamus, which had to be taken out of "King of the Jungle" because she was an expectant mother, may or may not be thrilled to learn that her baby already has been contracted for camera work.

Renews Contract.

Fredric March, candidate for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences award for the best performance of 1932, due to his role in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," has signed a new Paramount contract. March, now vacationing at Laguna Beach, recently completed "The Sign of the Cross" and "Smilin' Through." He returns to Hollywood soon to appear in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

"Honky-Tonk."

Mae West, colorful Broadway actress, will make her next screen appearance in "Honky-Tonk," an adaptation of the successful stage play written by herself. Miss West was signed to a long-term contract as the result of her splendid performance in "Night After Night."

Realistic.

The facial make-up of the "leopard man" in "Island of Lost Souls" will owe its realism to the fact that Wally Westmore, make-up expert, used the actual skin and hair of a leopard pelt in making it.

Of Theater.

Roscoe Karns, in "Undercover Man," has never earned a dime outside the theatrical business. His first job was as an usher, which led later to acting.

Trio Busy.

Three girls are kept busy sorting photographs pouring in of candidates for the role of Lion Man in "King of the Jungle."

THE CURRENT WEEK'S FILM AND VAUDEVILLE FEATURES

EARLE — Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis and Herbert Marshall in "Trouble in Paradise."

Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis and Herbert Marshall, three of the screen's most popular stars, are to be seen this week at Warner Bros.' Earle Theater in "Trouble in Paradise," Ernst Lubitsch's latest production for Paramount.

"Trouble in Paradise" tells in a humorous way of a modern Adam, Herbert Marshall, tempted by two women —a brunette, with love in her lips, and a blonde, with love in her heart. Kay Francis is the brunette and Miriam Hopkins the blonde.

It tells the story of Miss Hopkins and Marshall, two super-super-crooks, who play in suave fashion upon European society. Then it follows them through their most exciting adventure — the bamboozling of Miss Francis, svelte Frenchwoman, who possesses more money than the Bank of France. It is in this adventure that Marshall is almost tempted to turn from paths of wickedness into respectability, for his victim displays charms to which he is easily susceptible.

Heading the pretentious stage bill is Barney Rapp and his New Englanders, a group of eighteen young and clever performers, who entertain with singing, dancing and clowning. In the ensemble are Jane Allen, Kay Picture and Babe Miller. Other acts are Bob Hall, the extemporaneous chap, who sings songs made to order while you wait; Edith Evans and Ray Mayer, a cowboy and a girl, in a roundup of song, music and comedy; Carlton Emmy and his Mad Wags, and Maxine Doyle, mistress of ceremonies.

LOEW'S FOX—Will Rogers in "Too Busy to Work."

Will Rogers' most recent movie, "Too Busy to Work," is the current attraction at Loew's Fox Theater along with the five-act vaudeville offering.

The story of "To Busy to Work" revolves around the adventures of a philosophical and kindly vagabond and his search for his daughter, whom his unfaithful wife took with her when she ran away with a more aristocratic man while he was away fighting in the war.

Marian Nixon, of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," portrays the leading feminine role as Rogers' daughter, and also creates the romantic appeal of the film with Dick Powell, seen here recently in "Blessed Event." Among the others who have important parts in the picture are Constantine Romanoff, Douglas Cosgrove, Louise Beavers and Jack O'Hara.

Ben Ames Williams, famous writer, is the author of the original "Jubilo" from which the cinema was made.

Headlining the vaudeville this week is Will Osborne and his famous radio recording orchestra, who have not appeared locally for several years.

Next on the list are the Michon brothers, Joe and Pete, two of vaudeville's best-known acrobatic comedians. Valentine Vox, the world's most celebrated ventriloquist, has the next spot. The Andersons, with "Perfection in Balance," open the bill with their unique balancing offering.

As a special extra added attraction, Loew's Fox this week presents the wandering minstrels of the Columbia Broadcasting Company—Lea Reis and Artie Dunn, one of the best-known singing teams on the air today.

RKO-KEITH'S—Joel McCrea and Fay Wray in "The Most Dangerous Game."

The black primitives of Uganda, who live in the fastnesses of Central Africa, have an old saying that fits at least one psychological phase of modern civilization:

"Hunt first the enemy-man; then enjoy the woman."

But the supposedly cultured races also hunt first the man, then the woman.

It is this interesting subject which formed the premise for Richard Connell's "The Most Dangerous Game," considered by many literary authorities as the greatest short story of the decade.

This same theme, because of its novelty and basic power, is retained in the thrilling dramatic film version of the Connell classic, which is showing at RKO-Keith's Theater, with Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Leslie Banks and Robert Armstrong heading the cast.

The picture, filmed in the spirit of Connell's telling, presents the story of a nobleman who is bored with life, who has grown tired of tiger and lion hunts and finds no further glory in the casual conquests of women. He must find a new thrill to satisfy him—something dangerous, something that no normal man would attempt.

The film at RKO-Keith's is a vital, dramatic weaving in and out of the Uganda theme—a story that combines exciting entertainment of a new nature with magnificent jungle settings.

It was made for RKO-Radio Pictures by Merian C. Cooper and Ernest B. Schoedsack, producers of "Chang," "Grass" and "Four Feathers."

RIALTO—Sidney Fox and Eric Linden in "Afraid to Talk."

A dramatic screen answer to many pertinent questions American citizens are asking about rule by political parties is contained in Universal's timely picture "Afraid to Talk," current at the Rialto Theater. Screened from the powerful drama by Albert Maltz and George Sklar, "Merry-Go-Round," it presents a group of municipal office holders under the dictates of a party boss, who find themselves forced by a clamoring press and public to gain a conviction for an underworld murder.

Happening on the eve of an important election, the party leaders decide it necessary to act, but are suddenly thwarted when the gangster murderer produces evidence which will bare the graft and bribery of the office holders. In desperation the party attempts to "railroad" an innocent bellboy for the crime, and when public-minded citizens investigate complications develop so rapidly that the film proceeds toward its powerful climax with one intensely dramatic crisis after another.

Sidney Fox, Universal's talented dramatic actress, enacts the featured feminine role as the loyal wife of the bellboy, who is crucified for political purposes, played by Eric Linden. Tully Marshall, as the district attorney; Louis Calhern, as his suave assistant; Mayo Methot, as the traitor underworld queen, and Edward Arnold, as the gang leader, provide other highlights of the unusually vivid picture.

PALACE — Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in "Prosperity."

That inimitable laugh duo—Marie Dressler and Polly Moran—make their latest costarring appearance on the screen at the Palace this week in "Prosperity," a story written especially for them by Zelda Sears, and directed by Sam Wood.

The homely small-town atmosphere of such earlier Dressler-Moran hits as "Caught Short" and "Politics," is again evident in "Prosperity," but this time Marie and Polly are seen as mothers-in-law, whose constant quarreling, bickering and interference with the domestic life of their children and their children provide the plot with a ceaseless round of merriment, punctuated here and there by such bits of heart-stirring character work as only the versatile Miss Dressler can give her screen portrayals.

As is usual in the amusing Dressler-Moran family entanglements, one of the party has more money than the other and consequently makes herself obnoxious by her assumed "airs" and ill-dispensed charity. Leave it to Polly Moran to get the most out of this type of role. As the one whose well-lined stocking has been unimpaired by the depression she nobly welcomes her less fortunate in-laws into her home, with the result that vehement insults, as well as crockery, soon fly between the two mothers-in-law.

In addition to the feature, the Palace offers "Over the Counter," a revue subject; an interesting football film, "Football and Footwork," and the Metrotone Newsreel.

COLUMBIA — Charles Laughton in "Payment Deferred."

"Payment Deferred," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's film version of the New York mystery play hit, is the feature attraction this week at Loew's Columbia Theater, with the celebrated English actor, Charles Laughton, repeating the performance he made famous both in London and on Broadway.

The play, which deals with a unique treatment of a murderer and his crime, is an adaptation of C. S. Forester's novel, and was first presented in London, where it created a sensation, with Laughton's performance hailed as one of the artistic successes of the year. Later its triumph was repeated in New York.

A distinguished cast appears with Laughton, including Nell Hamilton, Maureen O'Sullivan, Dorothy Peterson, Verree Teasdale, Ray Milland, Billy Bevans, Halliwell Hobbs and William Stack.

In connection with the feature attraction, "Payment Deferred," at Loew's Columbia starting this Friday, there will be a Flip the Frog cartoon entitled "The Circle," and a Lloyd Hamilton comedy, "False Impressions," completes the bill.

METROPOLITAN—Paul Muni in "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang."

Paul Muni, the stellar character in the Broadway hit, "Counselor at Law," and famous for his screen role of "Scarface," has the title role, with Glenda Farrell as the feminine lead; Helen Vinson, the ingenue; Preston Foster, David Landau, Edward J. McNamara, Sheila Terry and other well-known players. In all, there are 37 important roles, besides 53 small or "bit" parts, and more than 2,000 extras.

Besides its succession of dramatic thrills the picture reveals several daring love episodes, depicts the fugitive's marriage to a woman who betrayed him and sent him back to the chain gang.

ON THE CINEMA HORIZON

Next week's screen and stage attractions will be as follows in the first-run motion picture theaters:

RKO-KEITH'S—Richard Dix and Ann Harding in "The Conquerors."

EARLE—Joe E. Brown in "You Said a Mouthful," and vaudeville.

LOEW'S FOX—Clara Bow in "Call Her Savage," and vaudeville.

PALACE—Jean Harlow and Clark Gable in "Red Dust," and vaudeville.

COLUMBIA—George O'Brien in "The Golden West."

Miss Barrymore Pays Capital a Pre-Broadway Visit

A New Comedy of A Diva's Life Is At the National

As might be guessed from its title, a musical atmosphere pervades "Encore," the new comedy in which Arthur Hopkins presents Ethel Barrymore at the National Theater this week, beginning tomorrow night, with matinees Wednesday and Saturday. There will be crescendos aplenty, according to advance rumors, but these won't be technical so much as atmospheric.

The principal character is a prima donna, and her entourage includes much more than the inevitable accompanist and maid, for she draws to her a famous concert pianist, a painter, and others, not to mention their children. The children couldn't possibly be neglected because it is her instinct to mother all the youngsters in sight that brings about the many comedy complications.

But in addition to the varieties of character portrayed, the play does, according to our information, deal authentically with the atmosphere surrounding lives of musicians. It should, because one of the authors, Victor Wittgenstein, is a concert pianist of reputation, his collaborator being Sheridan Gibney, author of "The Wiser They Are" and other plays.

Furthermore, the star herself is an accomplished musician. She studied originally to be a concert pianist, and though fate took her onto the stage, where she has succeeded so brilliantly in the tradition of her famous family, she still retains her love of music.

For the cast to support her in this comedy of atmosphere, Arthur Hopkins, as a producer of his distinction would, has chosen a considerable list of prominent actors. Among them are Siegfried Rumann, who was discovered by Mr. Hopkins and played for him in two productions before going into a featured role in "Grand Hotel;" Frank Conroy, leading man before this with Miss Barrymore in "Constant Wife" and prominent in various other successes; Sebastian Braggiotti, who appeared with Katharine Cornell in "Dishonored Lady;" Alfred A. Hesse, recently of "The Left Bank," and once before with Barrymore in "Declasse;" Josephine Hull, famous for her character portrayals in "Craig's Wife," and other George Kelly plays; Georgie Drew Mendum, Iris Whitney, Margaret Linck, Misha Perenzo, Clement Wilenchik and James MacColl.

After the local engagement, Mr. Hopkins will very shortly be presenting Miss Barrymore in "Encore" on Broadway.

Leopold Stokowski To Wield Baton at Inaugural Concert

With Leopold Stokowski conducting, the Philadelphia Orchestra will open its Washington season with the first concert of the series in Constitution Hall on Tuesday evening. As in previous years, the hour for the concert will be 8:45 p. m., after which hour the doors will be closed and latecomers not admitted until the intermission.

Many music lovers have been anxiously awaiting the selection of Mr. Stokowski's Washington program. Last season the modern programs presented by the Philadelphia Orchestra aroused much discussion both for and against. Tuesday night, however, will bring one of the loveliest programs possible, with not even a hint of the modern.

The program will open with the first Symphony of Brahms in C Minor, which consists of four movements, un poco sostenuto, andante sostenuto, un poco allegretto e grazioso and adagio piu andante, allegro non troppo, ma con brio.

After the intermission Mr. Stokowski will present three selections from Wagner's immortal "Tristan und Isolde," Vorspiel, Liebesnacht and Liebestod.

The organization of 110 musicians will again comprise 18 first violins; 18 second violins; 14 violas; 12 violoncellos; 10 double basses; 14 flutes; 4 oboes; 5 clarinets; 4 bassoons; 8 horns; 3 trumpets, 4 trombones; a tuba, tympani battery, celeste, euphonium and harp. Mr. Stokowski is continuing the "ereminvoux, now in a somewhat improved form for its value in enhancing the resonance of the string choirs.

First Guild Play Scheduled to Run At Wardman Park

The Drama Guild of Washington, which is presenting the first of its series of plays for this season at Wardman Park Theater on November 24, 25 and 26, is a most progressive organization. This season the guild is not only presenting its plays with the same high standards as in former years, but has its own workshop and staff of technicians. While the organization is purely nonprofessional, the individual members have all had wide experience in the dramatic field.

"The Squall," first of this season's presentations, is under the direction of Denis E. Connell. The play has been excellently cast, and the actors chosen for the various parts are giving the true Spanish fire and emotion to the roles assigned them.

The members of the cast under the direction of Mr. Connell are Hester Walker Beall, Esther Cloyd, Bethine Coe, Anne Ives, Bernard Bartin Cahill, Frank Jamieson, Maurice Jarvis, James Otis Porter, Howard Whitfield and Eldred Wilson. The technical staff is under the direction of Harry B. Hambleton.

National Symphony In Sunday Concert Starring Grainger

The Grieg concerto in A minor for piano, familiar and beloved by students, tremendously popular with an audience, has not been played here by a world-renowned artist with orchestra for many years. The only answer is that in the past, before the organization of the National Symphony Orchestra, Hans Kindler, conductor, concerts have been so few that the library of great music could not be adequately presented.

This afternoon at 4 o'clock, in Constitution Hall, the famous composer-pianist, Percy Grainger, will play the Grieg concerto with Kindler and his men. Grainger plays this concerto especially well—it's one of his "war horses"—and the Capital's music lovers will have an opportunity of adding to their memories of this superbly beautiful and dazzling work.

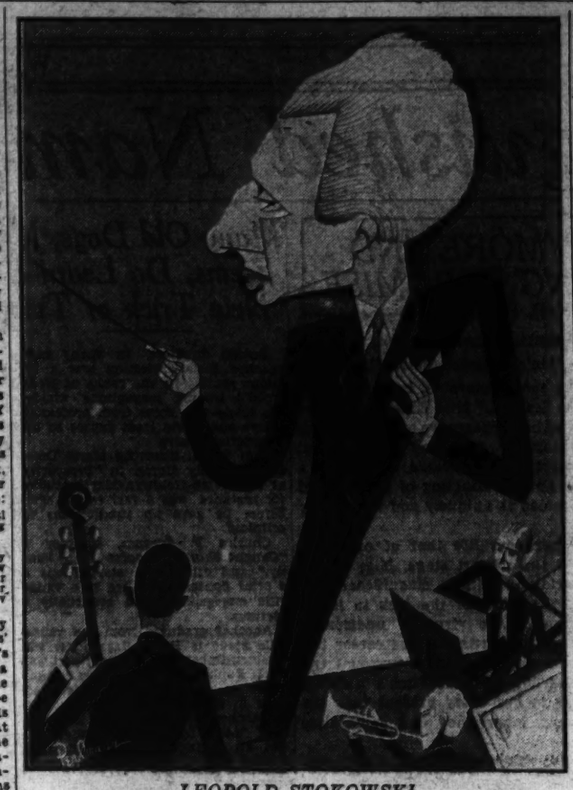
1. Ballet Suite.....Gluck-Mottl
2. Concerto in A Minor.....Grieg
   (Percy Grainger, soloist.)
3. Andante from Fifth Symphony.....Tschaikowsky
   "Tabatiere Musique".....Lladow
4. "Blithe Bells".....Bach-Grainger
   "Gumsuckers' March".....Grainger
5. "Iron Foundry".....Mossolov
   (extra number, by request)

The program is balanced actually to close on Grainger's "Gumsuckers' March." The playing of Mossolov's "Iron Foundry" is in response to a flood of letters, asking that the patrons of the Sunday concerts be given the opportunity to hear this highly controversial composition. At its previous presentation on the Thursday series, there was extravagant praise and equally violent condemnation. Several dozen persons left the hall while it was being conducted.

Today there will be a short intermission between "Gumsuckers' March" and "Iron Foundry" to allow those who know what is coming and want to escape it, to leave the hall.

Abbey Players.

The Abbey Theater Irish Players, now in the second week of their month's engagement at the Martin Beck in New York, have met with an enthusiastic reception. Broad, delicious comedy, farce or stirring drama, as the plays call for, is done with a graciousness and beauty that makes the theater a delight once more. In the repertoire during their forthcoming engagement at the National, several of their well-known successes, as well as other plays new to America, will have a hearing and are considered as the finest in the English-speaking language.



LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI, Who will conduct the season's first concert by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall Tuesday night, as the artist visualizes him wielding the baton over his famous organization.

Burton Holmes will be heard in the second of his season's series of lectures at the National Theater this afternoon at 3 o'clock. His subject today is said to be one of the most interesting of his entire series. It has to do with Bali, known in the terms of Mr. Holmes as "the last Paradise," and said by him to be the happiest place on earth.

Mr. Holmes brings Bali, in all its glorious tropic color, to the screen for the first time. And thanks to his elaborate equipment of lantern slides, exquisitely and accurately colored, Mr. Holmes is able to give his audiences the first really satisfying picture of beautiful Bali that has yet come to any screen. Without presentation in color, Bali can not be shown in even a small portion of its characteristic and peculiar charm. With color, it becomes the ideal realization of what a romantic and exotic tropical isle should be.

Burton Holmes, in his finished and artistic manner, brings to his audience the real Bali in all its unspoiled glory in its full dress of color as well as in its unique and lovely poetry of motion. The motion picture portion of the Holmes lectures this year are marked by an exquisite example of cinematic art, his subjects being given the advantage of the latest artistry in photography and projection.

Lucrezia Bori in Costume Recital Come Saturday

Lucrezia Bori, lovely Spanish prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera, and one of the most beautiful and popular sopranos of the American concert stage, is announced in concert at Constitution Hall next Saturday evening, November 26, at 8:30 o'clock, as the second attraction of Mrs. Wilson-Greene's Saturday evening concert series at that auditorium. This will be Bori's only Washington concert appearance of the current season. She will be assisted at the piano by Frederick Bristol.

The Bori program will open with the recitative and aria, "Ne men con l'ombre," from Handel's "Xerxes." This will be followed by a group of four songs of classic influence: Haydn's "Gia la notte," Baly's "I'd Be a Butterfly," Mozart's "Das Veilchen" and Endicott's arrangement of Arne's air, from "Comus."

Mme. Bori's second song group is lighter and more modern in origin, consisting of Beache "Ah! Love But a Day," Frank La Forge's "Sleep Song," the Grant-Schaefer "Cuckoo" selection, and Browning's "Rose Mayfair."

The first half of the program will be rounded out with a group of piano selections by Mr. Bristol: the Chopin nocturne, Op. 27, No. 1; Moussorgsky's "Ballet of Chickens in Their Shells," and Chasins' "Rush Hour in Hong Kong."

Immediately after the intermission, Mme. Bori will present her first costume group, three French selections by Chabrier, Arnaud and Weckerlin.

"The Bo Girl."

The Washington Light Opera Company, which is to give "The Bohemian Girl" some time in the near future, reports great progress in the development of the difficult roles and the drilling of the chorus. The fact that many of the most talented young singers of Washington are included among the principals accounts for this gratifying progress.

Singing rehearsals are soon to be supplemented with stage work and the plans for the actual production are being formulated.

THANKSGIVING'S PROMISE

The sagacious showman always has an ace up his sleeve, in a manner of speaking, against the coming of the great national feast day. Despite the immediate presence of a considerable list of stage and screen notables to be found in the current diversions in the picture houses, next Thursday will mark an even more fabulous accretion of both fame and merit.

In skimming superficially over the list of promised features, it is difficult to discount the probable excellence of such films as "The Cabin in the Cotton," starring Richard Barthelmess; "The Conquerors," with Ann Harding and Richard Dix; "Air Mail," featuring Ralph Bellamy, Gloria Stuart, Lillian Bond, Russell Hopton, Pat O'Brien, "Slim" Summerville and numerous others; Joe E. Brown in "You Said a Mouthful;" Jean Harlow and Clark Gable in "Red Dust;" or William Haines in "Fast Life."

These are among the conspicuous reasons why on next Thursday a great number of turkey dinners probably will be reduced from feature-length to short-reel running time!

CLIFFORD BROOKE SCHOOL OF DRAMA TO OPEN JAN. 16

CONFIRMING rumors that were prevalent in Washington last week, Clifford Brooke, director of many Broadway successes and mentor of the National Theater Players, announces the establishment here of the Clifford Brooke Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts, beginning a ten-week term on Monday, January 16. Enrollments will be accepted at the National Theater beginning Monday, November 28.

Associated with Mr. Brooke, in the Academy are S. E. Cochran, producing head of the National Theater Players; Maurice Greet, prominent Broadway director and student of the drama, and T. D. Bonneville, formerly manager of Poli's Theater. The academy will be under the personal direction of Mr. Brooke, with Mr. Greet as assistant director.

Mr. Brooke explains that the curriculum will offer training that is both educative and practical, developing personality, poise and expressional power, of value to beginners on the stage, those already in professional life, and to the layman. The courses of study will include Shakespeare, the old comedies and modern plays. To these studies will be adedd lectures and training in physical grace, deportment, stage business, make-up, diction and oral expression.

It is pointed out that as an adjunct to stage training at the academy, students will be invited to appear with the National Theater Brooke Academy Players as occasion arises, affording actual stage experience. Particularly talented students will thus have an early opportunity of learning what promise of success is theirs. Mr. Brooke states that an unusual opportunity is offered to students of schools and colleges in Washington and vicinity who have been studying drama under amateur direction, since upon graduation, if they elect to continue their drama studies, they may enter the academy for a post-graduate course under professional tutors.

For those students who aspire to adopt the stage as a career, Mr. Brooke says the academy has established an affiliation with Wales Winter and Chamberlain Brown, the New York agents, in order that those whose work merits particular recognition may be recommended to these two foremost agencies. It is proposed also to give a public performance at the conclusion of the term, presenting a representative play with the cast made up entirely of students, affording practical experience in all the teachings of the course.

A school of the drama in Washington, with a highly trained professional faculty, will fill a long-felt want and at the same time place the city on an equal footing with New York, Chicago and other centers of art and culture.

Mr. Cochran, who presents the National Theater Players each year, in association with Mr. Brooke, states that the need of dramatic instruction has been felt in Washington for an appreciable period. He says that innumerable inquiries have been addressed to him each year, tending to indicate that the establishment of a dramatic school under Mr. Brooke would be welcome. He points out that heretofore ambitious Thespians of this city have been denied the opportunity of essential training at home, being forced to seek instruction in New York or Chicago, with the coincident expense and inconvenience. Yet it is obvious, he says, that Washington has its full quota of those who are ambitious to pursue the teachings of this fascinating art.

In the contemplation of the establishment of a school of drama in Washington, it is of importance that the proposed school is to be under the personal direction of Clifford Brooke, a keen student of the drama in all its phases and one of the foremost directors of the professional stage, with a wide European background and extended experience in directing many New York successes.

Through his association with the National Theater Players over a term of years Mr. Brooke has become widely known in this city and widespread appreciation of his talents is felt in Washington. By reason of his successful and artistic presentations of good plays, the National Theater Players have gained recognition as the foremost stock organization in the United States.

Clara Tree Major Who Labors for a Theater of Youth

Clare Tree Major, the first director to put into practice the idea of a professional children's theater presenting children's plays with adult casts, is a person of indomitable energy and amazing versatility. Not only does she dramatize all her plays from favorite story books, but she directs and casts each one as well, besides exerting a controlling influence over her three companies playing in nine different States this season.

Nine years ago, in her own New York studio, she presented her first children's play. So popular did it prove that it was not long before her company had to move to the Princess Theater. Since then, in ever-widening circles, the influence of her idea has spread.

Last spring Washington children saw one of her plays. This year they are to have six, beginning with yesterday's "Sara Crewe."

Mrs. Major, in a lecture before the Institute of Child Guidance, in New York City, phrased her idea of the children's theater thus:

"When I look into the hundreds of eager, excited, confident faces in one of our audiences, I feel a keen sense of responsibility touching the value of the impression my play is to make on these plastic, responsive minds. I know it must be joyous—one moment of happy, spontaneous laughter repays one for many hours of labor—its ethics must be sound, for impressions made in these moments of concentrated attention are both deep and lasting, and above all, it must be good theater, to win the love and understanding of the children for this most human of all the arts. So may we confidently trust to them the development of the ideal in the theater of tomorrow."

WILL OSBORNE, the original crooner, who brings his orchestra to the stage of Loew's Fox Theater this week to headline the vaudeville bill.

AT THE PLAY IN NEW YORK

By MARK BARRON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19 (A.P.)—Don Marquis, now threatened with total blindness, is a poet and a humorist. His laughing rhymes have cheered the many readers of his columns and books. Now it must be recorded that the poet in him triumphs with his drama concerning the last days of Jesus.

This "The Dark Hours" is a passion play, a touching, moving picture of those last days when the Christ was persecuted by the high priests, denied and betrayed by his friends, and, lastly, brought to trial before the procurator of Judea.

Marquis wrote this play seven years ago. It was published and highly praised by the literary critics. Only now has it been brought to the production stage, and with Mrs. Marquis (a graduate of the Theater Guild) as director.

IT IS a moving, sincere portrayal of a sacred theme. Where it fails is where the stage itself fails. The reverence and dignity of such a subject are tainted by the mechanistic puppets of the theater.

For most of the play, the author has written his own poetry into the dialogue, but where the character of Jesus speaks he uses only direct quotations from the King James version of the Bible. And there lies the weakness of the play: not in the dialogue, but in the fact that the author premits the Divine Person to appear upon the stage.

"THE GOOD FAIRY" was revived here this week with Ada May in the role Helen Hays originated when the comedy was first produced last season.

Miss Hayes will not be seen on Broadway this season and probably won't be again for more than a year. Gilbert Miller wants to present her in London first and is now seeking a play in which she and Leslie Howard can appear together before the first of the year.

THE THEATER GUILD is well under way with rehearsals of its second production of the season, this being "Biography," a new play by S. N. Behrman. This makes his third guild play, the other two having been "The Second Man" and "Meteor," both with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in their casts.

"Biography" has Ina Claire playing the leading role. This will be the first time she has been seen on Broadway since 1928 when she closed in "Our Betters" to go out to Hollywood and marry John Gilbert.

Charles Richman and Mary Alden have been added to the support of the blonde Miss Claire.

Janet Richards.

Miss Janet Richards, in her talk tomorrow morning on "Affairs Political and International," will make the usual review of the high lights in the world's work for the past week, with particular reference to the recent developments in the foreign debt situation as viewed in Washington and in the various European capitals, and the proposed conference of the President and the President-elect concerning the attitude to be assumed by the United States toward postponement of interest payments.

The talks are given every Monday morning at 11 o'clock in the red parlor of the Willard Hotel, main floor.

Junior Opera Plan Meets With Favor

The response of Washington youngsters to the idea of producing a juvenile opera has been so enthusiastic that the Washington Civic Opera Company has extended the time limit for junior membership.

The opera selected is the ever-popular Gilbert & Sullivan "Pirates of Penzance," with a special vocal arrangement scored for juvenile voices. The expert coaching and directing to be provided should prove of great advantage to the talented young folk of Washington.

Children between the ages of 12 and 15 should write at once to Miss Maxine De Silvia, 1349 Columbia road northwest, giving age, height, weight and vocal experience so that they may be notified of auditions.

Buys Stories.

"The Good Thing," a play by Lawrence Hazard to be produced on Broadway this fall, and "Safari," an African adventure story by Paul Hervey Fox, have been purchased by Paramount for early film production.

Community Center Announces Autumn Festival of Dance

Central Community Center announces the presentation of the autumn dance recital at Central High School Auditorium, Thirteenth and Clifton streets, Saturday evening, November 26, at 8:30 o'clock, when Lisa Gardiner and her dance group will be assisted by the distinguished Russian dancer, Michael Nicholoff, as guest artist of the occasion. Other well known players who will be seen in the program will be Harry Walker, of "The Vagabonda," of Baltimore; Paul Bradbury Walter, of this city, formerly of the Kenneth Sawyer Goodman Memorial Theater of Chicago; Jane Dunscomb and Virginia Campbell, of New York City, former members of the Lisa Gardiner dance group.

The program will be presented in three parts, featuring the Spanish drama-ballet, "Love the Magician," the story of which is by Martinez Sierra, and the music by De Falla; "Les Sylphides," with music by Chopin; and a succession of divertissements by the featured artists as well as by Alice Louise Hunter.

Lively Burlesque On Tap at Gayety

Sam Michaels, himself, is comfortably placed as top comedian. Supporting Michaels in his merry antics is Virginia Muzzie, a black-haired beauty whose personality is entirely suitable to the parts allotted to her; Ruth Bradley, prima donna; Lew Powers, eccentric comedian; Snookie Woods, a winsome Oriental dancing soubrette; Joe and Ernestine, a wonderful dancing specialty; Bob Sandberg, character actor, and Minor Reed, a clever young juvenile of ability.

CAPITAL ART AND ARTISTS

By VYLLA POE WILSON

GREAT impetus will, no doubt, be given to the art endeavors of the National Capital and to American art in general with the inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt as President of the United States. The President-elect is an enthusiastic patron of art and has a special leaning toward the realistic idea of some bit of scenery of his native land. In the Roosevelt home in Hyde Park, New York, hang many a painting by well-known American artists that have taken his fancy and that of Mrs. Roosevelt on their frequent visits to art galleries and exhibitions. Mr. Roosevelt, the citizen, is something of a connoisseur. Together with his American scenes he has a rare collection of marine paintings, part of his valuable collection of marine memorabilia.

It is recalled that the White House boasts few paintings outside of the portraits of Presidents and the Ladies of the White House. No doubt many of the paintings now in the Hyde Park home will make the private parlors and apartments on the second floor more attractive.

In the Roosevelt home there are a number of excellent paintings of the New England countryside. One of them is of a characteristic New England farm and home which caught the governor's eye at an exhibition by R. Emmet Owen, who is exhibiting similar paintings at the Sears-Roebuck Art Gallery this month.

Mr. Owen has won an enviable reputation as a painter of these New England scenes. He has his studio at Greenwich, Conn., on the estate of Percy Rockefeller, who owns many of his paintings. One of the landscapes in the home of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the President, by Mr. Owen, was purchased by President Wilson at an exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Mrs. Curtis Dall, daughter of President-elect and Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, Mr. Raskob, Thomas Lamont and Paul Cravath all own portraits by this talented American artist. Mr. and Mrs. Sears Hemming, of Washington, also own some of his works.

OF particular interest to American artists will be the exposition of Indian tribal arts which will be held here in February. The water colors of the American Indian artists have received world-wide recognition. Recently attention has been attracted towards the Indian's ability in mural paintings. Some of these murals will be exhibited at the Corcoran Gallery.

Another interesting development of this exhibition will be the use of oil colors by the Indian artists to depict their native dances and ceremonials. The exposition is now in Cincinnati and will then go to Cleveland for an exhibition at the Cleveland Museum of Art.

THE Downtown Gallery, at 113 West Thirteenth street, New York, announces an exhibition of recent work by Stefan Hirsch. The show opened on Friday and includes paintings in oil and tempera and a group of drawings.

This exhibition, "New York and Mexico," strikes a new note in the season's art calendar. The contrast between the cool American scene and the vivid Mexican scene gives an effect of unusual variety, a stimulating sense of the artist's reaction to the objects before him. His versatility is demonstrated by the scope of subject matter, which includes the New York sky line, Mexican landscapes, ruins, animals, figure groups, portraits and barnyard scenes. While closely related to nature, these paintings evince an imaginative quality so rare in American art—a quality which places Mr. Hirsch in the class of highly creative personalities in our native art world.

Always known as a meticulous draughtsman and recognized for his sensitive painting, Stefan Hirsch's recent work shows an added dexterity and a greater textural richness. These developments were probably stimulated by the change of scene, which in turn has brought into his paintings a spirit of the mystery of new lands.

The exhibition will continue for three weeks, closing December 8.

The art studio of King-Smith Studio-School will have the first studio exhibition of the year this afternoon at 1751 New Hampshire avenue, when Maj. and Mrs. George Oakley Totten will be the guests of honor and when Mrs. Totten will show the film depicting the manufacture of her procelain in Sweden.

Maj. Totten will speak and illustrate his talk with his water color sketches of the sculpture reliefs recently discovered in Central America.

HILDEGARDE HAMILTON will hold an exhibition of her paintings in the studio of the District of Columbia League of American Pen Women beginning with a tea today from 4 to 6 p. m., to which art lovers are welcome.

Miss Hamilton's exhibition of paintings of foreign and Virginia scenes have been exhibited at home and abroad.

Beginning her career as a child, she has studied at Geneva, Ecole des Beaux Arts at Seville, in Paris at Julien's and Colorossi's, the Proctor School of Modern Landscape Painting in England, and in America at the Art Students League.

TWO one-man shows of water colors, and one of sculpture opened at the Art League, 2111 Bancroft Place, ended November 15. It would seemingly be difficult to find two more dissimilar painters than Robert Gates and Elizabeth Langenbeck, both showing their water colors in the current show. Robert Gates, who is the instructor in graphic arts in the league, works in studied tones of grayed warm and cool tones. Earlier work, such as "New Haven Street," shows firmer composition, and more of a dependence on line structure creating form. Another period of his work, one of a Carolina mountain series, "The Mountain Symphony," has a great deal of clarity and sweeping movement, with undulating hills, cabins, and clouds all forming an active design with symphonic interrelation of tones. Mr. Gates, who studied in many schools, including the Detroit Society of Arts and Crafts, Art Students League in New York, Mechanics Institute, and others, has worked independently recently for periods in Yale University, and the Phillips Memorial Gallery, and painting at various times in interesting localities.

In his show will be seen a group of Martinique and Bermuda ship and shore scenes. Mr. Gates spent last summer in a four-masted schooner with a group of other artists, architects and college students on a jaunt through the Caribbeans, and the results of his work there are shown for the first time.

Surprising to most people who imagine that places like Bermuda, Martinique and Puerto Rico are always in hot glaring light, Mr. Gates has brought back paintings that he feels are more like the atmospheric conditions in those tropical islands. Most of them are dark, moody, dramatic water colors, with heavy damp-looking skies, and with a tense feeling of expectation of storm. Occassionally, where sunlight does glance through the weighted sky, delightful patterns are the result, as shown in "Fort de France, Martinique," and "Hillside, Martinique." Ship pictures are always difficult to do well and interestingly. As subject matter, boats and ships have become a little trite and common, perhaps because so many amateur painters ill use them, and because they are popular for every kind of mass craft work, from lampshades to printed textiles, and weather vanes. A little different aspect is given ships by Gates, in expressing better textile quality in the sails, which for once do not look like thin pieces of enameled tin. Gates has done quite a bit of work around Washington, and a few landscapes of local scenes are shown in the hall. One of a few scattered houses, centering around a little red church, has the most refreshing color.

Mrs. H. Hobart MacCubbin, who paints under the name of Elizabeth Langenbeck, is a local Arts Club member and active in the work in that society. She studied in Washington and New York and worked with Ennis in Maine. The group of paintings shown at the league constitute largely the Eastport, Me., series, and she also has painted extensively in New York and abroad. Airy, dry and calligraphic, her work is largely based on a few colors, namely, greens and oranges, and their neutrals and values. However, there is not a feeling of scarcity of color, and she makes such strong monumental design out of the shacks and wharfs of the little coast towns, that what color she does use is part of the structure. Unlike weaker painting, it would be impossible to separate the color from the design. Boats, bridges, shacks, rocks, trees and houses are all solidly realized, and it is obvious that Langenbeck understands the rugged quality of coast life. Winds and storms may beat down on the rocky shores, but they can not wear down the endurance of coast structures. It would be a fine thing for art if more painters, in going afield for painting, would try to understand the character of the section they are working in instead of subjugating the locality to the personality of the painter.

AFTER a number of years of technical training in the Corcoran School of Art, Margot Broxton worked for several summers in the Playhouse in the Hills, a school directed by Katharine Frazier, at Cummington, Mass. The exhibit of Broxton's work at the league shows a development of an individuality—first with several portraits, life-size heads that are careful, meticulous studies. Sensitive and well poised, they are probably exact portraits of the models. Two recent portraits, namely, "Old Man Adam's Child," an expressive poignant study of class character, and the head, "Mary Taylor," show fine workmanship. Smaller pieces of sculpture in porcelain, bronze and colored plaster are very interesting. Two small queer animals, modeled at the National Zoo, and called "Viscachae," huddle closely together. Rabbits are modeled, running, cuddling and sitting. One little rabbit, ears plastered back to its head, fairly gallops along. A small statuette, inspired by Ruth St. Denis' Japanese dance, makes a well-balanced and exquisite figure.

Her reliefs are just as sensitively modeled. Children, always difficult to do because of their soft delicacy, retain their charm in sculpture through Broxton's work. A more incised and bolder relief is the portrait of Representative Rainey. One of the most charming works in the show is her fountain figure of a small child gazing wonderingly at a turtle. It is a pleasure to see a fountain figure that is self-contained and completely and sensibly modeled. So many fountain figures are seen that are sketchily and oversentimentally modeled. This figure made life-size, would be fine for a low pool in an informal garden.

Altogether, her group of sculptures makes one of the most interesting shows in that medium we have seen. Usually, sculpture on pedestals shown against a bare wall are of interest only to a fellow worker in the medium. Arranged in a colorful show, with relief through the use of colored wall hangings and decorations, the sculpture looks like it would if it were part of home furnishings. Collectors are usually hesitant of buying sculpture for private collections, but seeing "Mary Taylor," a Florentiné-like bust, on top of a richly colored old chest with a beautiful piece of tapestry behind, shows how well sculpture can fit into home use.

Gypsy Women Trick Man Into Loss of $30

They promised excitement if Kidder wrapped up six $5 bills in a handkerchief. Kidder followed their instructions. When he opened the handkerchief—after the gypsies were gone—the bills had vanished.

Kidder called the police, who arrested the gypsies. Unperturbed, the ladies pointed to Kidder's shirt front. Kidder opened his shirt. The six $5 bills fell out.

"You wouldn't kid a Kidder?" he asked the ladies as police released them. "We would and we could," one gypsy replied.

NEW BOOKS AND THEIR AUTHORS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

Lovers of poetry will greet with delight the news that an authority in the book world recently declared that "this day is the greatest for poetry that two generations have seen."

Poetry, that is the verse of popular poets, has gotten into the best-seller class, if we can believe the astounding testimony that an anthology of poetry gotten out some time ago by Louis Untermeyer, one of the foremost of our young poets, has nearly reached the 150,000 mark in sales; 100,000 copies of Stephen Vincent Benet's "John Brown's Body," to which President Hoover referred in his book talk with Christopher Morley, have been put into the hands of eager buyers, and Edna St. Vincent Millay's "Buck in the Snow" had a first printing of 20,000 copies.

It is said that 40,000 poets and near poets are striving to write the world's greatest poem in this country alone. If that be true, the number should be curtailed. It is safe to venture the prediction that many of these would-be song birds would do far better to choose prose for their medium. Yet the very multitude of poets promise a better day for poets as a whole. For they are training, feeble though may be their songs, the Nation to a true appreciation of poetry.

Now that Napoleon's library has come back to France, temporarily, as a loan from a Berlin book seller who owns it, it is interesting to notice that there is no fiction in the collection, but it is replete with volumes of poems, mostly of the classical type. Among the other volumes are copies of scientific works and volumes on the characteristics and customs of foreign peoples, religion, history and philosophy. Bibliophiles will be attracted by the splendid bindings, especially designed for Napoleon.

The library is on exhibit at Malmaison, and it is hoped that eventually the library may become the property of France.

Those in Washington who are following the series appearing in the Ladies Home Journal, written by Alice Roosevelt Longworth, entitled "Some Reminiscences," will agree that in the second installment Mrs. Longworth has gone from "strength to strength," in a literary sense. Her style is fluent, gripping in intensity and with due attention to human interest elements. It verifies a theory held by many students that women make the best biographers and historians because they remember the highlights and sidelights of happenings, the "atmosphere," as it were of history-making events.

As an instance of this in Mrs. Longworth's most recent section of her series is where she describes a visit she made during the famous "Taft" trip to the Philippines, when she was presented, daughter of the then President of the United States, at the palace of the then Dowager Empress of China.

Mrs. Longworth writes:

"Finally we were escorted to the hall where the audience was to take place. The empress dowager sat on a throne several steps higher than the floor, very erect, one long-nailed hand on the chair arm and the other in her lap, in marvelous Chinese robe and headdress, hung with pearls and jade. There were great pyramids of fruit on either side of her chair.

"I was presented first," continued Mrs. Longworth. "I curtsied, advanced a few steps, curtsied again, advanced a few more steps and then curtsied again directly in front of the throne. The others went through the same performance afterward. • • • 'The Old Buddha' spoke to all of us in turn through an interpreter. Her conversation with me was the usual perfunctory formalities, inquiring as to the health of my father; did I enjoy my visit?

"The interpreter was Wu Ting Fang, who had been minister in Washington. He stood between us, a little to one side, but suddenly at one stage of the conversation the empress said something in Chinese in a small ravage voice, whereat he turned quite gray and got down on all fours, his forehead touching the ground. The empress would speak; he would lift his head and say it in English to me; back would go his forehead on the ground while I spoke; up came his head again as he said it in Chinese to the empress; then back to the ground went his forehead again. It was extraordinary to think it was the same man who enjoyed making pert remarks at dinner parties in Washington. One literally had the feeling that she might at any moment say, 'Off with his head,' and that off that head would go.

"The character and power of the extraordinary old empress was a palpable thing. She had real charm, too, old as she was; brilliant, intelligent eyes and a cruel little mouth, turned up at one corner, drooping at the other."

Should Mrs. Longworth decide to expand these memoirs into a book there is no doubt but that it would prove a best seller and a treasured volume on one's permanent book shelf.

In the last decade of the nineteenth century, a little boy of seven or eight years old was taken by Champ Clark, the noblest Roman of all American statesmen of his time, to Statuary Hall, the old chamber of the House of Representatives in the National Capitol at Washington. There the awestruck lad saw a simple bronze marker on the marble floor and was told that it designated the place where John Quincy Adams, President of the United States, scholar, legislator and veteran of many political battles, had, like an old soldier stricken in battle, "fallen forward, as falls a man."

The lad was Bennett Champ Clark, son of the Speaker, and that visit to Statuary Hall began a life-long interest in John Quincy Adams, which flowered last week in the publication by Bennett Champ Clark, senator-elect from Missouri, of what has been described as "one of the best biographies of John Quincy Adams" ever written. Just off the presses of Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, Mass., it marks the entry into American public life of one, like Adams, trained to its service since youth, and resembling him also as the "scholar in politics."

When Bennett Champ Clark grew to manhood he carried his boyish interest in John Quincy Adams with him. He had listened to Speaker Clark, one of the best versed men in America on historical matters, tell of John Quincy Adams' long service in the House of Representatives after he had served the Nation as President. Then came the World War and Bennett Clark marched away with other sons of America to return the youngest colonel in the A. E. F., as his father proudly said. Marriage followed, then a brilliant career in law in Missouri. All the time Senator-elect Clark hugged close the thought to himself that some day he would write a life of his favorite statesman of the past. With this in mind, he read everything about John Quincy Adams on which he could lay his hands. As he says in his introduction, Adams was alien to young Clark's traditional school of political philosophy, but that mattered little to this savant.

He has a real feeling that this Adams is entitled to a place among the great of America. From his different background he could see the grand old Puritan with all the tolerance of one accustomed to the broad open spaces of Missouri. Clark found in him the Great Independent of American Politics.

Senator Clark does not attempt to varnish history or paint his subject in the temporary colors of flattery. With the probity that distinguishes his family, he does not hesitate to say what he actually thinks of Adams—whether for good or for bad. And we suspect that it may be this very quality which will give this biography of John Quincy Adams its greatest value.

Speaking of the diary of John Quincy Adams, Clark writes: "As we turn its pages and note his petty meannesses, his malice toward all of his associates, his claims of ill treatment at the hands of all of his contemporaries, his unctuous self-righteousness, his constant imputation of the worst of motives and conduct, we are moved to something like active dislike of the man. But when we consider his spotless probity, his robust Americanism, his fearless patriotism, his high statesmanship, we can not but admit, however reluctantly, that he possessed many traits of mind and character which bear a most striking, even if a most repellent, likeness to the noblest qualities that public men may possess."

Col. Clark claims that Adams' sixteen years in the House of Representatives were the most outstanding period of his life. He deals with the statesman more than the man, in a sense, yet gives us a clear picture of his personality, withal.

The style is graphic, accurate and filled with human interest. It should rank as one of the leading biographies of the year and be quoted and be referred to for many a year to come.

THE STRANGEST FRIENDSHIP IN HISTORY. By George Sylvester Viereck. (Liveright, 375 pp. Reviewed by Harold J. T. Horan.)

The literary work of George Sylvester Viereck is a strong argument for the thesis that there is a definite relation between an author's arteries and his output. Mr. Viereck once wrote passionate poetry that rates a place in any anthology of erotic verse. Later he became, with the years, more subdued, and essayed pamphleteering and editing. He was also at one time a propagandist, and a very good one, for the German Empire. At a time in one's life when the Czechoslovakian spas have become an annual necessity, he has tried the task of historian, and in this latter role he combines the flavor of the three literary generations.

His latest book is an extraordinary fatras of mumbo-jumbo, hero worship, factual table-tipping and desuet Freudian psychoanalysis. In it he tries to show that "Woodrow Wilson stalks through history on the feet of Edward Mandell House." He lays at the feet of the Texas statesman the credit for most of the developments of the Wilsonian regime and then says:

"The advice of House, not Wilson's confidence, opened the path to the Presidency for Herbert Hoover." Col. House is credited with being the author of the "Fourteen Points," the "Federal Reserve Act," the "Freedom of the Seas," the final decision on the Panama tolls question and the negotiator of a Pan American pact to guarantee "peace and territorial integrity with the A B C powers" in South America.

Incidentally, Mr. Viereck exposes the real reason for his own disavowal of pro-Germanism by giving the publication of the famous Zimmerman letter as the cause.

This letter agreed on the return to Mexico of the "lost provinces" in the event that the United States went to war with Germany on the side of the allies. Mr. Viereck then says:

"He could not longer support a nation which attempted to parcel out American territory."

The book in some places is an unusually vivid picture of the plastic world which the result of the war placed in the hands of President Wilson and his close adviser, Col. House, for ultimate shape. On January 5, 1918, House and Wilson reviewed each one of the fourteen points and here is the way their discussions casually disposed of the continent of Europe:

"(They) had no difficulty in agreeing upon the restoration of Belgium. They differed on Alsace-Lorraine. House advised Wilson not to mention the two provinces specifically. He also suggested that the message on this point should read: 'If Alsace and Lorraine were restored to France, Germany should be given an equal economical opportunity.' • • • Both the President and his duumvir agreed that certain clauses in the treaty of London, giving Italy sovereignty over foreign nationalities, were plainly in conflict with the principles espoused by the United States. The two men agreed that Turkish rule in Europe must end."

On account of Viereck's close friendship with the Kaiser, the book is a valuable reflection of the conversations between Col. House and the war lord before the United States entered the war. This part of the story was read and revised by the two protagonists themselves.

When the author soars into the blue empyrean of symbiosis, astral transmutation, schizoid analysis, and Libido in an endeavor to explain the relations between the two men, the effect is confusing, and offers no clarifying help to a study of this most interesting relation in recent history. Evidently somewhere Mr. Viereck must have read of the astounding versatility of Leon Daudet in the realms of psychoanalysis and pure fiction, histology and history, and has tried to do the same thing in English. This maneuver has merely beclouded the picture that an honest and unassuming portrayal might have definitely shown.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson are accused of forming a barrier around Wilson in the days of his disability to prevent the real facts of his condition from being known. This circle barred even Joseph P. Tumulty, the President's secretary, who had been with him ever since he had been governor of the State of New Jersey, and who had been associated with the President for a longer time than any or both of them.

Viereck quotes the scene that took place on the day of Wilson's funeral. The President's secretary and Mrs. Tumulty had not been invited up to a few hours before the ceremony. McAdoo agrees to speak to Mrs. Wilson about the apparent oversight, and then Mrs. Grayson calls up to say that both Secretary and Mrs. Tumulty are expected for the funeral. Tumulty afterward told the story as follows:

"We go and they let us in and we come out afterward and they call out the names for the carriages and I listen, and all the other names of friends and statesmen are called out there before the reporters, and then after the names of two doormen from Keith's Theater, at the very end of the list comes poor Tumulty! And I got in and followed the hearse."

"The vindictive attitude of Edith Bolling Wilson toward Tumulty was not mitigated by the death of her husband," Viereck declares.

The book is frequently marred by apocryphyal quotations of conversations between leading figures in the various dramas of that time. Furthermore, Viereck has the unusual habit of suddenly bringing himself into the narrative. The result on the whole is a very uneven egocentric picture that adds but little to what is already known of the epoch and utterly fails to justify the prediction in the last chapter.

GUY MERVYN. By Florence L. Barclay. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

This early book, written by the author of "The Rosary" when she was but 22 years old, is published for the first time. One pauses to regret that this book has been denied us all this time and to speculate as to whether, after its resurrection from the limbo of the unpublished, it will become a world-wide best seller even as "The Rosary."

The story is that of the England this author knew and loved so well. It is fresh and very spontaneous. There are all the elements of charm, humor and sincere spiritual emotion, which make it not only an interesting book to read, but one that will linger in the memory after it is finished and put aside.

Of course, this is an idealistic book, as are all the books by this author. It is a welcome change from the sordid output of even the best publishers which we have offered to us today.

HARVESTERS. By Phillips Russell. (Brentano, New York.)

"The men who figure in this book are those who began, furthered or completed a harvest—harvest of thought or deed, or both—in a way to influence human destinies," writes the author in the foreword.

It is with great interest that the biography-reading public turns to this book by the biographer of Benjamin Franklin and Emerson. We are sure that it will be a scholarly work, fraught with interest and that understanding of human events and tides of history which go to make up a real biography.

Mr. Russell has culled his characters for this book from the dominant figures of various periods of history—Frederick II, Holy Roman Emperor and foe of religious tyranny; Leonardo di Vinci, a creative genius far in advance of his day; Copernicus, astronomer and disrupter of creeds; Martin Luther, who shook the Papacy to its foundations; Cortez, explorer and adventurer; James Watt, master of new physical forces; and Jefferson, the social architect.

With a true pen he has etched out the lives of these men, depicting their strong individuality in thought and action, misunderstood and often condemned by their contemporaries. Phillips Russell has given us a rare insight into these characters, helping us to understand and appreciate these sturdy harvesters in the broad acres of social, political and philosophical thought.

This is a real story of mystery and crime which keeps us guessing until the last chapter, and is written in the sure and subtle manner only this author can command.

It is a story of a psychological adventure at sea and among the Malaysian Islands far from the maddening throng.

The characters are clearly and unusually drawn, in Capt. Nichols, the composite rascal of the seas; Dr. Saunders, a derelict from Harley street, and Louise, the pale-haired island girl who brings such disaster to the men who love her.

There is amusement and an underlying hint of instruction in this book. But Maugham is not of the type who sets himself up as a pedagogue in his novel writing.

But there is shrewd characterization and a definite philosophy of wit. The narrative is one that will hold the attention from beginning to end which, in the long run, is what the public wants in a book of this kind.

MUSICAL CIRCLES IN WASHINGTON ARE HAVING ONE OF THEIR MOST ENJOYABLE WEEKS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

WASHINGTON will join wholeheartedly in the world-wide celebration on November 29 of the bicentennial observance of the birth of Franz Joseph Haydn—familiarly known as "Pappa Haydn," eminent composer of both secular and sacred music.

Born one of a family of twelve children of an Austrian cook and wheelwright, Haydn wrote his name high on the golden scroll of musical fame. A graduate of the renowned Saengerknaben of Vienna, the singing boys whose latest representatives sang in Washington only a few days ago, it was in England where his fame was first recognized to any considerable degree.

As Haydn himself said: "My language is understood by the whole world." His matchless creations, 1,047 in number, have enriched music for all time and his life is an inspiration to every musician of the present day. He added the murmur of muted strings and the clear song of the clarinet to the voices of the orchestra, which he further enriched by writing parts in such fashion as to bring out the individual tone-color of each voice. Another musical achievement for which he is remembered is the development of the elementary sonata form, adding a second theme to relieve the monotony of but one. Among his pupils were Beethoven and Mozart.

On the 200th anniversary of his birth it will be a joy for musical Washington to join in the span of tribute to one who so adorns the fine art to which he gave a lifetime of devotion.

The District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists will hold a public service at St. Peter's Church Tuesday, November 29, at 8:15 p. m., in commemoration of the bicentennial of the birth of Franz Joseph Haydn. The program to be sung by the mixed choir of the church will include a performance of the celebrated "Mass in D Minor," composed by Haydn for the coronation of the Austrian Emperor.

The choir is composed of a chorus of 45 voices, with the following solo quartet: Agnes Whelan McLaughlin, soprano; Carolyn Manning, contralto; Robert O'Lone, tenor, and Romeo Gusraldi, barytone. Christopher S. Tenley is organist and director. The Right Rev. Eugene J. Connelly, pastor of the church, will speak on the subject of music.

But five weeks away, the coming important convention of the Music Teachers National Association of the United States, to be held in Washington December 27, 28, 29 and 30, promises to accomplish one thing for the city locally. Already it is creating a fine cooperation among the musicians here and a splendid interest in the organization itself, membership in which carries with it many privileges.

So Washington is looking forward to benefits that will reach beyond the events of these four vital days, with their inspiration in personal contact with the leading music teachers of th Nation. This progressive unity of purpose will assure a continuing advantage to the music teachers of the National Capital.

Mrs. Fannie Amatutz Roberts, who is in charge of membership, will furnish all details as to enrollment to any teachers who have not been reached. Her address is 2107 S street northwest, Potomac 1846.

Membership in the Music Teachers National Association confers the right to attend the various lectures and discussions of the conference and gives admission to musical events—concerts and recitals—that are arranged with extreme care to be of definite value to all those attending the convention. Also each member receives a copy of the printed proceedings when published, which are recorded annually in a year book that is greatly valued by musicians as a permanent library containing the pith and marrow of the opinions of leading musical advocates.

The special music events of the December conference include a concert at the Pan-American Union to which Dr. Rowe, director general, has extended an invitation to the members; a chamber music concert by the Gordon String Quartet and Harold Bauer, pianist, given in the auditorium of the Library of Congress in compliment to the visiting musicians; and a concert by the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, Hans Kindler, conductor, to which the orchestra's management has kindly invited members of the M. T. N. A. and Dr. Kindler will recognize their presence by devoting at least a part of the program to American composers of different parts of the United States. Between the lectures and conferences will be a number of shorter programs designed as "Musical Interludes" that are being arranged by Mrs. Eugene Byrnes and Miss Lucy Brickenstein.

The program has been announced for the organ recital which will be given tonight in Christ Lutheran Church, Sixteenth and Gallatin streets northwest, by Edward Rechlin, of New York City. Mr. Rechlin is known on both sides of the Atlantic for his skill as an interpreter of Bach. The recital will start at 8 o'clock, and the public is invited. The program follows:

Fantasia and Fugue in C Minor (C. Philip E. Bach); (a) "In God My Faithful God I Trust" (Hanff); (b) "Thee, Lord, I Love From All My Heart" (Krebs); improvisation (Rechlin); (a) partita, "O God, Thou Faithful God" (J. S. Bach); (b) "Lord Jesus Christ, to Us Attend" (J. S. Bach); Fugue in B Minor (J. S. Bach).

The schedule of the United States Marine Band and Orchestra for the week includes the following: Monday at 3 p. m., band concert; Wednesday at 8 p. m., symphony concert.

The program for the monthly symphony concert will include the Seventh Symphony in A Major, opus 92, by Beethoven; Tonada, No. 10, by the Chilean composer, Humbert Allende; "Danse Africaine," by the Brazilian composer, H. Villa-Lobos, and the "Grand Festival March," commemorating the centennial of the Declaration of Independence, especially written by Richard Wagner for the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876. The soloist for that evening, Principal Musician Clayton Lindsay, flutist, will play Charles T. Griffis' "Poem for Flute and Orchestra."

On Friday at 3 p. m. there will be an orchestral concert.

The concerts will be given in the auditorium at the Marine Barracks, and Capt. Taylor Branson, leader of the Marine Band, will conduct.

The Mount Pleasant Congregational Church chorus and quartet will present their first Sunday evening sacred musical program in the church auditorium tonight. They will sing Maunder's "Song of Thanksgiving." The solo parts will be sung by members of the quartet, Miss Elsie Schultze, soprano, Miss Mary Apple, contralto, William P. Shanahan, tenor, and Herman Fakler, bass.

The cantata will be given under the direction of Claude Robeson, organist and director, with Norton M. Little, chorister, conducting.

McGoofey's First Reader

By H. I. PHILLIPS

WHO is this?

This is a farmer.

The farmer looks frightened.

Yes, the farmer has reason to look frightened.

Why is he frightened?

Because he has just heard that the Government is going to do something to help him.

Why should that frighten a farmer?

If you had been through what the farmer has in the last few years you would know. Whenever the farmer hears that Washington will come to his aid he prepares for the worst.

But doesn't the Government try to help the farmer?

Yes, but when the experiment is over the farmer doesn't know whether he has been through a period of assistance or a major operation.

Why does the farmr need assistance?

Because he is in a bad way.

Can't he open a gasoline station or a hot dog stand or something?

Not unless the farm is on a trunk road, and even then he will have too much competition.

What is the farmer going to do now that Uncle Sam has promised to aid him?

I don't know, but if he is smart he will run like everything.

Why?

Because he is sick enough.

ALPHABETICAL LESSON.

O is for onions, impressively strong;
They make you feel right, but they get you in wrong.

P is for people for whom great concern
Is shown when election time comes, as you learn.

Q is for quarter, or twenty-five cents,
Which to the possessor brings joy that's immense.

R is for racket, the land's leading "biz"—
And if you're not in one, most everyone is.

* * * *

They'd do just one trick without barking for fish.

* * * *

Which Florida says you can catch, if you wish.

U is for universe, looking quite sad;
And if it gets worse it will just be too bad.

THE STORY OF JANE.

JANE was a farmer's daughter.

She was born and raised out in the great open spaces.

She grew up among growing things, and loved the birds, bees and flowers.

Before she was 12 years old she had won prizes for the best exhibit by a schoolgirl at the State flower show.

She became a gardening enthusiast and could tell all there was to be told about the culture of bulbs and flowers.

Her father built her a hothouse and her botanical accomplishments were the talk of the countryside.

Everybody knew about her prize gardens.

When she was 18 she eloped with a young man she had met in the local cinema house.

She went with him to the city, and her folks didn't hear from her for a long time.

The blow came when she wrote them that she hadn't asked her husband what his business was before she married him, but that she found that he was a manufacturer of paper flowres in Yonkers.

Where one finds the gentle breezes
And life's not a round of sneezes.

Culbertson on Bridge

By ELY CULBERTSON

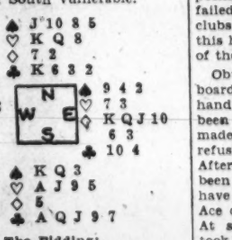
IT is very unusual for a supposedly strong pair to arrive at a declaration to take 11 tricks, on which they go down 3 tricks, undoubled. Such a peculiar result is possible only in the Howell method of scoring, where a difference of 10 or 20 points may mean several match points.

It is not rare in contests of this kind for players to arrive at perfectly preposterous contracts in attempts to get better results than the teams with whom they are competing. The following hand illustrates this principle very thoroughly:

South—Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.



The Bidding:

(Figures after bids in table refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	2♣(1)	2NT(2)
Dbl.(3)	Pass	Pass	3◇
3♡(4)	4◇(5)	4♡(6)	5◇(7)
Pass(8)	Pass	Dbl.(9)	Pass
5♡(10)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—Possibly a better bid here would be one notrump, but this made no difference in the ultimate result.

2—A bluff bid, made in an attempt to stop an obvious vulnerable game. The bid is fairly safe on account of the exit in diamonds.

3—South knows full well that East holds a perfectly good out, probably in diamonds. However, the Double serves to show partner that a strong hand is held.

4—East having shown his escape suit, South now decides that it is useless to give his partner an opportunity to double and that his best course is to show his second suit.

5—Continuing the defensive measures.

6—With this bid probably lies the fault for the unfortunate outcome of the hand. However, North is in a somewhat bad position for making any bid. He has done nothing but show a minimum Raise in clubs to date, and his hand is actually stronger than this. Besides, which is much more important, it is a Howell game, and it may be that a heart contract will prove to be top score on the board.

7—Under the present method of scoring, a non-vulnerable side can safely take a 600 penalty or a set of 4 tricks to save a vulnerable game. Four Hearts count 620, whereas five diamonds doubled, down 4 with 100 honors, count only 500. This, incidentally, is one of the unfair features of the present Duplicate rules and will probably be changed some time in the near future.

8—A forcing pass, deciding to leave final decision to partner.

9—The only possible bid.

10—South, knowing that East is a fairly sound player, decides that the set will not possibly be large enough to make up for the loss of a game. Believing that his partner holds four hearts he decides to take the gamble and try for the maximum on the board.

In the play the Declarer had very little choice as to what to do. A diamond was opened and continued, and he was obliged to ruff the second round. The King of spades was now led and West took the Ace, continuing with another spade. Declarer was now forced to lead three rounds of trumps in the hope that the opposing trumps would fail. When they failed to do so, he led two rounds of clubs and two rounds of spades. After this he was forced to concede the rest of the tricks.

Obviously this was bottom on the board, but the curious feature of the hand is that if the final contract had been four hearts, South could have made a perfectly good safety play by refusing to ruff the second diamond. After this he could no longer have been forced, for all that he would have to do would be to take out the Ace of spades before drawing trumps. At some tables no adverse bidding took place at all, and the Ace of spades was the opening lead. A spade continuation allowed these Declarers to make six-odd. Of course, at most tables the hand was played in clubs.

Certain hands lend themselves more readily than others to Slam bidding, and it is true that there are a great many hands which will produce Slams which can not be bid. Very rarely do we find the combination where it is very easy to miss the Slam and also where three distinct types of bidding, all technically accurate, will result in reaching this best declaration. The following hand was played at ten tables of Duplicate and only three teams attained the maximum.

At all three tables North dealt and passed. South opened the bidding with one heart and North responded with two diamonds. Two Souths now bid two notrump and in both instances the response was three clubs. One South player now bid four clubs, and his partner took the bid immediately to six; the other bid three notrump and his partner now bid five clubs. Six clubs was then the obvious bid. At the third table, South, instead of bidding two notrump over the two diamonds, bid three clubs himself and his partner then took the bull by the horns and bid six clubs immediately.

I have analyzed all three of these methods and am unable to find fault with any of them, and yet I am sure that every one will admit that it is far from easy to reach a Slam contract on this hand.

Duplication of values is undoubtedly one of the greatest dangers which beset the inveterate Slam bidder. Honor-tricks form quite a definite foundation for reaching these high contracts successfully, but all the honor-tricks in the world are powerless if it is found a little too late that each hand contains two losers in the same suit.

The Approach-Forcing System combats this evil more forcefully than any other system, for the simple reason that it allows the maximum amount of time for inferences between partners to be exchanged. Once a Forcing bid has been made, the bidding must automatically be kept open to game and, consequently, both players are able to continue bidding minimums until their lack of strength in a certain suit is quite clearly exposed. Systems which approve of Ace-showing have never successfully been able to do this, because of the stress which they automatically must lay upon these cards alone. The lack of Kings, Queens and even lower intermediates can frequently cause the downfall of the soundest-looking Slams. The main trouble with Ace-showing has always been that by the time the partnership is in position to begin showing these Aces the bidding is so high that the showing of one Ace may immediately place the contracting at an unmakable figure. I have disdained such artificial uses and consider that simple, logical inferences go much further toward establishing the number of tricks which a hand can produce.

This does not mean that I do not approve of cue-bids; and, as a matter of fact, I consider the double cue-bid the finest example of exposing duplication in the whole game of Contract.

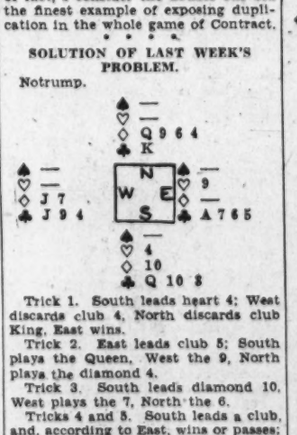
SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S PROBLEM.

Notrump.



Trick 1. South leads heart 4; West discards club 4, North discards club King, East wins.

Trick 2. East leads club 5; South plays the Queen, West the 9, North plays the diamond 4.

Trick 3. South leads diamond 10, West plays the 7, North the 6.

Tricks 4 and 5. South leads a club, and, according to East, wins or passes; North makes diamond Queen, or South makes another club.

THIS WEEK'S PROBLEM.

Each Sunday I will prepare a problem in end-play. In this week's problem, which is No. 14 of the series, the contract is notrump, and it is South's lead. North and South are to win three out of the five remaining tricks against any possible defense. The answer will be given next Sunday.

About the Chess Table

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER

Winter chess activities are scheduled to get under way very shortly in the District. Of immediate interest to local chess fandom is the announcement of G. E. Bishop, of the Capital City Chess Club, that commencing Saturday, November 26, there will be held weekly rapid transit tournamnets in which the public is invited to participate. For the benefit of those unfamiliar with this type of play we may explain that the entire tournament, regardless of the number of entrants, is completed in a single evening. This is accomplished by limiting the time before the separate moves of each player to about ten seconds. Hence, a game going to 60 moves requires only a maximum of 20 minutes to complete.

Of greater interest to those who take their chess somewhat more seriously is the announcement from G. E. Bishop and J. Tucker, jr., officials of the District of Columbia Chess League, that plans are under consideration for commencing the popular annual team tournament of the league. It will be recalled that the only requisite for entering teams in this tourney is team membership in the league and a minimum of five members per team. Those interested in grouping themselves for purposes of competing should get in touch with Mr. Bishop immediately at the Capital City Club, Edmonds Building, 917 Fifteenth street northwest. Last year there were about ten teams entered in the tournamenta in which the Young Men's Christian Association won the titular honors. This year it is hoped to increase the number of teams taking part.

Capital City Notes.

E. J. Simmons is leading the field in the Class C tournament at the local club, closely trailed by F. W. F. Gleason. Gleason still has a game to play with F. T. Parsons and by winning it he can acquire first honors. In the recent games Apitz won from Gleason and Tompkins drew with Simmons. Simmons won from Tompkins, and Tilton lost to all the entrants.

We apologize for incorrectly reporting last Sunday that Tompkins lost to Tilton. The standing of the players is as follows:

Player.	W.	L.	Player.	W.	L.
Simmons	3½	1½	Parsons	2	1
Gleason	3	1	Tompkins	1	3
Apitz	2½	1½	Tilton	1	3

Player.	W.	L.	Player.	W.	L.
G.E.Bishop	6½	1½	J.Roberts	2½	5½
C.W.Stark	5½	2½	F.W.Gleason	1½	6½
M.C.Stark	4	4

Beautiful Brevity.

There appears below the score of one of the prettiest brevities it has been our good fortune to see for some time. It was played recently in Berlin by one Nadel, with whom we are unfamiliar, and an unnamed adversary. The annotations are those of Brian Harley in the London Observer. Readers owe a vote of thanks to Dr. Douglas S. Scrivener, who forwarded the game from England.

Queen's Gambit.

Nadel. (White.)	Mr. X. (Black.)
1 P—Q4	P—Q4
2 Kt—KB3	Kt—KB3
3 P—B4	P—B3
4 Kt—B3	P x P
5 P—QR4(a)	B—B4
6 Kt—K5	P—B4(b)
7 P—K4!	Kt x P(c)
8 Q—B3	P x P(d)
9 Q x B	Kt—Q3

12 Kt—Kt6ch!	RP x Kt(g)
13 Kt—Q5ch	P x Kt
14 Q—K5mate(h)

(c) If P x P, 8. P x B P x Kt, 9. Q x Q ch, K x Q, 10. Kt x KBP ch, etc. If B x P, 8. Kt x B Kt x Kt, 9. Q—B3 Kt—Q3, 10. B x P, P—K3, 9. B—QKt5 ch K—K2, 10. P x P.

(f) If Kt—B3, simply 12. Q—B3, and White will at least keep his extra piece.

(g) BP x Kt allows mate by 13. B—Kt3.

(h) A lovely little game.

Solutions to Problems.

The key to No. 505, three-mover by the local player, W. B. Mundelle, is B—Q4. Solvers seemed to enjoy it very much. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, J. W. Harris, C. C. Bettinger, Fred T. Hafelfinger, Henry M. Ward.

Jacob Frech writes: "Problem 505 generates about 40,000,000 series. No national or international problem is likely to be more complex. The logical principle of systematic adequate reverification of premises can discover the following revelant middle term: A problem in which White can play one of the following only series of quickest forced mates: 1. B—Q4; 2. Kt—KB6 or 7 or Kt6 or QB6; 3. Q—R7 or Kt7 or Kt—K7 or R6 or Kt8."

C. C. Bettinger, himself a problemist of no mean ability, comments: "This is a very fine, sparkling problem. Ambush key, sacrificing queen, affords some nice play, especially after 1. . . ., K x Kt; 2. Kt—B6! The best three-mover I have seen in a long while."

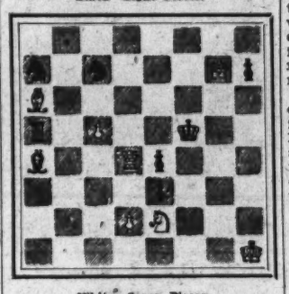
Henry M. Ward remarks: "This problem is refreshingly simple after 503 and 504. It is obvious that White's primary objective is a move that will prevent black checking on move one or two. The only move that fulfills these requirements is B—Q4!"

Fred T. Hafelfinger writes: "Have not had much time recently, but when 503 Kt—R4 came out thought I had made an error myself. I had got Kt—Kt3!"

PROBLEM NO. 506.

By M. EHRENSTEIN, Budapest.

K on KB4; B on QR5; Kts on QB2 and QR2; Ps on KR2, K5, K6; R on QR4.
Black—Eight Pieces.



White—Seven Pieces.

K on KRsq; Q on KKt7; R on Q4; B on QR6; Kt on K2; Ps on Q2 and QB5.

Canned Brown Bread To Replace Hardtack

Missoula, Mont. (U.P.).—Rations for Uncle Sam's Forest Service employes in all parts of the United States and Hawaii, packed here each year for distribution, will contain no hardtack for the coming year, officials have announced.

The "army cake," formerly used by the rangers, will be replaced by canned brown bread, increasing the calorie content of the foods packed for the forest workers. The can in which the bread is packed will be used as a coffee pot after its contents have been removed, lightening the rangers' equipment. Cans of hash, pork and beans, roast beef, fruit, coffee and a bar of candy will be placed in each rations pack with the bread.

Officials said that 32,000 pounds of the bread would be required.

Radio Dial Flashes

By ROBERT D. HEINL

EXTENSIONS of international radio telephone networks now definitely planned will embrace all the continents on the globe and make possible the connection of virtually any two telephones in the world, according to Bancroft Gherardi and Frank B. Jewett, vice presidents of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The world-wide telephone network, when it is completed, in accordance with the present plans, will include countries having 99 per cent of all the telephones in the world and having 92 per cent of the world's foreign trade.

London-New York: Additional long-wave channel to be completed in 1934; submarine cable, no date. London-Montreal: short-wave, completed in 1932. Berlin-Mexico City: short-wave, no date available. Lima-New York: short wave, nearly ready. Bogota-Miami: short wave, nearly ready. Maracay-Miami: short-wave, nearly ready. Madrid-Rio de Janeiro: short-wave, 1932. Brussels-Buenos Aires: short-wave, 1932.

Casablanca-Paris: short-wave, no date. Capetown-London: short-wave, 1932. Johannesburg-London: short-wave, no date. Cairo-London: short-wave, completed. Algiers-Paris: short-wave, no date. Brussels-Leopoldville: short-wave, 1932. Berlin-Cairo: short-wave, no date. Capetown-London: short-wave, 1932. Paris-Tananarivo: short-wave, no date. Amsterdam-Bandong: short-wave, no date. Bombay-London: short-wave, no date. London-Singapore: short-wave, no date. London-Tokyo: short-wave, no date. Hongkong-London: short-wave, no date.

Due to the success of selling electric refrigerators in the United States with the aid of coin-operated time clocks the British are taking interest in this form of installment selling, not only for refrigerators, but also radio sets.

The idea for a coin-operated timing device in connection with radio sets is gradually forging ahead in Great Britain, it is pointed out. The use of an appliance of this nature, it is felt, will overcome many of the present difficulties of the installment or hire-purchase business, since the money is collected gradually to suit the pockets of the poorer classes.

IN response to a paragraph in this column asking listeners who like hill-billy music over the air to write in to WJSV, Harry C. Butcher, local Columbia manager in charge of the station, received the following letter:

"WJSV asks in The Washington Post today for evidence of interest in 'hill-billy' music. If it be genuine, it is the most American thing there is left. It should be preserved in its most national setting and it should be made known as only the radio can make it known.

"It is not just 'clowning,' as some call it. We are at great pains to preserve German, Swedish, Russian 'folk music'—why not American 'folk music?' It should be encouraged, not abolished. A song I heard over the old Virginia station (The Young Eagle—or the Eaglet, some such title) on the occasion of the Lindbergh kidnaping, was as fine a piece of spontaneous 'folk music' as I ever heard.

"If we are all voting on it, I vote to keep and to develop 'hill-billy' music."

To which Mr. Butcher replied:

"The number of enthusiasts for hill-billy music is not yet sufficient to include it as a regular feature. But we will put on some music of this type when we have open spots, and later, if demand warrants, we can give it a regular place in our programs."

A MESSAGE from his holiness, Pope Pius XI, and addresses by five archbishops will be heard during a special Catholic University of America program to be broadcast over WJSV, 6:15 to 7 p. m. tonight. This broadcast will replace the afternoon period of the Columbia Church of the Air for today.

The Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, archbishop of Baltimore and chancellor of the university, will read the message dispatched from Vatican City by the holy father. Other Catholic ecclesiastic leaders who will speak on the program, their addresses constituting a symposium on present-day problems of religion and education, especially as they are related to each other, will include his eminence, William Cardinal O'Connell, archbishop of Boston; the Most Rev. John J. Glennon, archbishop of St. Louis; the Most Rev. Edward J. Hanna, archbishop of San Francisco; the Most Rev. John Gregory Murray, archbishop of St. Paul; and the Right Rev. Monsignor James H. Ryan, rector, the Catholic University of America.

Devotional music for the program will be rendered by the Catholic University Choir of 50 male voices, under the direction of Prof. Leo Behrendt, with Mr. Frank Brennan at the piano. Their selections will include the ancient Netherlands folk-song, "The Prayer of Thanksgiving;" the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Beethoven's "The Mount of Olives," and "Nature's Praise of God," by the same composer.

ARTURO TOSCANINI will direct the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra in a group of selections of the romantic period, including compositions of Schubert and Wagner, during the seventh broadcast of his current season (WJSV, 3 to 5 p. m.). The broadcast will originate on the stage of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The opening selection will be Schubert's Symphony in C major.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will act as commentator during the intermission, giving explanatory program notes on the selections performed.

After the intermission, Toscanini will present the lovely "Siegfried Idyll" by Richard Wagner. Composed in 1870 in commemoration of the birth of his son, Siegfried, the Idyll was first performed on Christmas morning in Wagner's own home.

The orchestra will conclude the concert playing the dramatic overture and Bacchanale from Wagner's "Tannhauser." Toscanini has chosen the Paris version for performance.

The Earl of Lytton, chairman of the League of Nations commission which recently reported on the situation in Manchuria, will be heard in an international broadcast through WJSV at 1:15 p. m. today. Particular interest attaches to his review of the Far Eastern imbroglio in view of the fact that the league is scheduled to begin consideration of the commission's report tomorrow.

LEADING representatives of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths will join in a program presented for the Welfare and Relief Mobilization of 1932. Margaret Matzenauer, former Metropolitan opera star; Archer Gibson, organist, and the Chicago a Capella Choir, directed by Noble Cain, will provide the musical portion of the program.

The speakers will be Archbishop John G. Murray, of St. Paul; Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, of Baltimore, and Bishop James E. Freeman, of Washington.

Mayor-Elect John P. O'Brien, of New York City, and George F. McClelland, of the NBC, will join Maj. Edward Bowes in celebrating the tenth anniversary of the Capitol Theater Family (WRC, 11:30 a. m. today). All of the regular staff will be featured.

"Knute Rockne," the tone poem Ferde Grofe wrote in honor of the late football coach of Notre Dame, will be featured by Paul Whiteman's orchestra (WJZ network, 6 to 7 p. m.). This concert also will mark the first presentation by Whiteman on the air of George Gershwin's "Second Rhapsody." Roy Bargy will be at the piano during the last number.

ROXY AND HS GANG are back on the air to stay. The Roxy broadcasts from Radio City, inaugurated last Sunday, will be continued over a coast-to-coast network each Sunday (WRC, 1 p. m.).

"Eunice and Her Dad" will read the funny sections of The Washington Post over WRC at 3:45 o'clock this afternoon.

The morning period of the Church of the Air broadcast over WJSV each Sunday morning, at 10 a. m., will be conducted by the Rev. Joseph H. Miers, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of this city.

Exercises and addresses at the dedication of a monument to German sailors who died while prisoners of war at the U. S. Army Hospital in Kenilworth, N. C., will be broadcast by WJZ and network at 3 o'clock this afternoon. F. W. von Prittwitz, German Ambassador to the United States, will be the principal speaker. The program will be short-waved to Germany.

COLUMBIA'S fall and winter schedule calls for more than two hours of classic music out of the seventeen comprising the network's daily time on the air. This new all-time high record is composed of regularly scheduled features, exclusive of international and other spot broadcasts of symphonic music which would add several hours to the grand total.

Commenting on this new record for American radio, Julius F. Seebach, director of program operations, declared:

"It is my firm conviction that the American public is becoming increasingly interested in the best in music. Virtually all of the distinguished European observers of America have remarked upon the intellectual curiosity of radio listeners and their desire for the best in all forms of entertainment. In including the two greatest symphony orchestras in our weekly schedule and surrounding them with a number of similar organizations, Columbia is merely keeping abreast of the great modern trend in musical taste."

Outstanding among Columbia's broadcasts of classic music are the concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini, and the Children's Concerts under Ernest Schelling, and of the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Leopold Stokowski conducting.

Canned Brown Bread To Replace Hardtack

Missoula, Mont. (U.P.).—Rations for Uncle Sam's Forest Service employes in all parts of the United States and Hawaii, packed here each year for distribution, will contain no hardtack for the coming year, officials have announced.

The "army cake," formerly used by the rangers, will be replaced by canned brown bread, increasing the calorie content of the foods packed for the forest workers. The can in which the bread is packed will be used as a coffee pot after its contents have been removed, lightening the rangers' equipment. Cans of hash, pork and beans, roast beef, fruit, coffee and a bar of candy will be placed in each rations pack with the bread.

Officials said that 32,000 pounds of the bread would be required.

"MAGPIE" AFTERNOON DRESS OF BLACK VELVET AND WHITE SATIN MAKES BOW

Lingerie Never So Exquisite As Seen Today

Georgette, Crepe de Chine and Cobwebby Cotton Used in Beautiful Colors.

By DARE.

NEVER in all the history of womankind has lingerie been so exquisite as at the present moment. Georgette, crepe de chine and cobwebby cotton in the most lovely shades of pink and blue, mauve, yellow and green, trimmed with filmy lace, fine embroidery or dainty applique, and bows of soft satin ribbon—who can resist it? Not I, for one! There is nothing especially new in the style of the garments which are being shown by the famous specialty shops. It is just a case of "it isn't so much what they do as the way they do it." And that, after all, is the secret of the superiority of all Parisian clothes.

The slim silhouette is carried out in underclothing as well as in frocks and coats, the only fullness being gained by fine, flat pleats which cling to the figure and yet give sufficient play for walking. The favorite undergarment—and in many cases the only one which the smart Parisienne wears—is known in Paris as "chemise-pantalon." We call it the "step-in." This may be as simple or elaborate as one's purse will allow. I saw some lovely ones the other day of flesh-colored crepe de chine which had a design of little triangles in drawn work edged with a tiny piping of blue on the front and on either side of the skirt. In the same shop was one of the most lovely that I have ever seen of delicate Nile green crepe de chine with a band of ecru lace set in around the top and a design of tiny bell-shaped ecru flowers and leaves in crepe de chine appliqued on both the lace and the body of the garment.

For the woman who prefers two garments, there is a short chemise and a little pantalon, the latter a remarkable little garment which is much more like a short divided skirt. One of these designed to be worn under a black evening gown, was of black georgette laid in fine pleats on either side and with a plain fitted yoke. A band of fine black lace was appliqued around the bottom and up the sides. These pantalons are often made by the dressmaker in the color of the evening gown.

Some of the shops are showing a bloomer of georgette or crepe de chine finished about the knee with a wide set-in band of lace, and gathered on a fine elastic band which is covered by a narrow satin ribbon tied in a bow at the side.

Nightgowns run to extremes. They are either quite decollete, without sleeves, and very elaborately trimmed with lace and embroidery, or they are of the long-sleeved, tailored variety, which are very much used for traveling on train or steamer, and are becoming more and more popular for ordinary wear as well.

A very smart New York woman showed me the lingerie which she had selected for Christmas. This included a half dozen of these tailored gowns in different shades of crepe de chine, each of a different design. Some had a long chimesette of squares of drawn work on the front, some had a jabot of the crepe de chine and others were embroidered, but all had a turn-over, pointed collar and narrow turned-over cuffs with little pearl link buttons.

There are new sleeping pajamas also which are being shown in the most exclusive shops with a sleeveless jacket elaborately embroidered, and some even have a narrow band of embroidery on the bottom of the trousers. Pajamas of figured silk and crepe de chine in the small patterns which are so fashionable for gowns, with a long, mannish dressing gown to match, are found also in many of the shops.

A clever French woman who has made a world-wide reputation as a designer of fine lingerie is using appliqued flower designs in color, the inspiration for which she gets from old prints. A mauve night-dress from this artiste, for instance, has a scalloped design in hemstitching around the neck, and on one side of the front there is a spray of fuchsias in mauves and purples that is almost Victorian in character. There is also a suit of pale blue pajamas which is piped with rose and decorated on the front of the jacket with a spray of wild roses and green leaves in applique.

Sleeves on Gowns Fanciful This Year

If your closet is full of dresses that are perfectly good, but—, don't despair, counsels the Delineator. The "but" is sure to be the sleeves and collars and these two tell-tale details can easily be replaced by new ones. Last year's sleeves were plain—this year's are fancy. Last year's necklines were low—this year's hug the collar bone. You don't even have to have matching material to ring these changes. Many of the new dresses have sleeves and yokes that are of another fabric and sometimes even of another color.

Velvet dresses and wool ones often have satin or rough crepe sleeves.

Crepe dresses and wool dresses may have velvet sleeves. Or yokes and sleeves may be of the same fabric but in a contrasting color. We have in mind three French dresses that you can easily imitate. One is black rough crepe with a white crepe yoke and sleeves. Another is dark green velvet with dark green satin sleeves, and another is black wool with sleeves and a small collar of soft blue wool. Paris is certainly playing right into our hands this season!

Lame for Shoes

Paris boot-makers signal a revival of silver lame for evening shoes, although this is as yet a small demand, and crepes are the favorite evening fabric. Metal is popular for trimming the crepes, in narrow bands and applications.

Pompons on Hats

Paris, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Velvet pompons are a new wrinkle in hat trims. Bereta and toques are trimmed with two velvet pompons of the same color perched on the crown. They are generally embroidered in dots of a contrasting color.

Right, white transparent velvet bridal gown with interesting high neckline and long sleeves. The bridesmaid's frock of dusty pink georgette is without trimming.

(Copyright, 1932.)

Sweaters Giving Sports Full Value Sartorially

Made Part of Many Smart Ensembles This Year—New Coat Models Have Collars, Bands and Cuffs.

By DIANA MERWIN.

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Sweaters may make sportswomen of us all this fall and winter.

Even those whose sports activities are limited to dodging taxicabs or skating on icy sidewalks will be dressed to give those activities their full sporting value sartorially, for sweaters form a part of many smart ensembles.

There are sweaters, for instance, as daintily feminine as if they were made of chiffon, and others as rough-and-ready as the woolen jacket-blouse of a Maine guide. The wool blouse, incidentally, shares a place with sweaters in the feminine sports mode this season, proving itself useful with two-piece sports suits.

The newest and smartest sweaters are distinguished by small standing collars, full upper sleeves and fitted forearms.

Plaids, stripe combinations and costume colors are seen in the smartest shops, and usually there are scarfs, caps, gloves and hose in matching or harmonious designs to complete a sports ensemble if desired.

Bramble yarn and angora are combined in a number of attractive plaid designs.

The new models include a 1932 version of the coat sweaters. The small collar is again in evidence here, and the sweater buttons straight up the front. Ribbing trims the yoke, bands and cuffs.

Powder Compacts Growing Larger

Paris, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Powder compacts are larger than ever. The newest edition is a flat circle 5 or 6 inches in diameter, made of silver, gold or brilliant enamel.

It is devoid of any ornament and is equipped to carry loose powder and an ostrich feather puff.

Use for Dusty Pink

Dusty pink is beginning to be heard from, considered another color which may be suggested as looking equally well under black and brown coats. Black and white continues to be first choice for certain types of frocks, notably those which serve a dual purpose.

Checks Selected For Sports Wear

Paris, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Comtesse de Jumilhac is among smart Europeans who are choosing checks for sports wear and traveling this season.

She wears en ensemble of gray and pale yellow checked wool which has a blouse and three-quarter length coat made of the checked material and a straight skirt of plain gray diagonal wool. With it the Comtesse uses gray accessories.

Swagger Coats

Three-quarter swagger costumes made history this fall. Women like the easy swing of the coat from the shoulder after so many seasons of the fitted waistline.

Suit for Cooler Days

Winter's approach finds little suit ensembles in vogue. Revillon Freres has designed one of wine brown velvet and trimmed it with brown astrakhan of the same tone. The muff and hat also are of astrakhan.

Brides Prefer White Velvet, Heavy Crepe Satin or Lace for Gowns.

By ELEANOR GUNN.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Your modern bride has an eye to the future of her wedding gown. This is very evident by the type of dress chosen by those who are "middle-aisling it" this autumn. That is why so many brides are choosing white velvet or heavy white crepe. These materials are much in evidence at smart parties. Satin is, too, but less so than formerly. Lace is always a bridal possibility and usually a safe choice.

The waistline is anywhere the bride wants it to be, and this is true without stepping out of the current period into the past. One hears less than usual of the robe de style, because our own day provides rather more than the usual variety as to sleeves, waistlines and such things as usually definitely date a gown. Just about anything may bear the 1932 date line

So many smartly turned out women are selecting costumes without fur, especially for traveling, that it seems ill-advised not to take the opportunity to have an ensemble quite independent of fur, having a detachable capelet or something of the sort for special occasions if one feels so inclined.

Fur is used to such an extent indoors that women find it amusing to step out without it.

There are so many convertible gowns being shown just now that the traveler, whether she be bride or otherwise, has a much simpler time getting a going-away trousseau together. If she is clever enough to assemble accessories of several sorts and colors, she may go far with and in one costume.

One can never be quite certain what does or does not come off this fall. Costumes are so cleverly designed that, in a jiffy, one has changed from one dress to another without really having done anything but jerked off a guimpe or slipped into a jacket. Both guimpes and jackets are inclined to have large sleeves, but this is by no means an arbitrary rule. There are enough short sleeves around to make even the question of length an independent issue. But if you would leave no doubt in the minds of your friends about being in the know, have your necklines high.

Netting Needle Once Expensive

Paris, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—This being a knitting era, as far as necessities and luxuries are concerned, one is reminded of an earlier day when the craze was netting. The shuttle, or netting needle, was very expensive in the eighteenth century, and the pastime an amusing one. Women used this dainty tool in making a kind of narrow lace known as netting. Today we would call it footing.

This gave fashionable women an excellent opportunity to display dainty and bejeweled hands. Netting enameled netting needles cost as much as $40 in some cases. The Marquise de Pompadour had a pair that cost $27.60, and the Comtesse de Provence gave Mme. de Beaumont a gold netting needle decorated with miniature paintings worth a fabulous sum. The estate of the Duke of Lorraine was found to contain, on his death in 1781, seventeen netting needles in amber, rock-crystal, gold, mother of pearl, agate, petrified wood—all set in gold.

Stripes on Coats

The checks which owed their first popularity to Chanel may be expected to appear again in bolder version for the sports suit and coat and in more classic black and white for the tailleur. Stripes look especially new for the informal coat.

Woolen Fancies

The return to fancies in woolens has been a very important factor for sports coats and suits this fall.

Taffeta to Fore

There is confidence in the revival of taffeta since style interest in crisp, formal silks, plain and printed, has already been demonstrated by the ready acceptance of printed, starched mousseline de soie last summer.

Light Wines and Beer To Bring Gayer Clothes

National Mood Demands Change in Apparel as Well as in Government, Hollywood Style Creator Says.

Hollywood, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The politicians overlooked something—the effect of the election on feminine fashions.

Orry Kelly, Hollywood style creator, is responsible for the statement styles in women's clothes are due for a change, directly traceable to the recent elections. He bases his belief on a study of the national mood as evidenced in the casting of votes.

"Glitter, glamour and gayety," he says, "will be fashion's new watchword.

"With the expected advent of light wines and beer, clothes will become gayer," Kelly forecasts. "The restricted, pentup feeling that everyone has had since war time will disappear and the reaction will certainly be felt in dress."

Already, he says, glitter is the vogue, and stores already are beginning to show large quantities of shimmering materials, such as sequins, gold and brass metallic trimmings and beading. Copper especially, he pointed out, is ready for the run of a popular fad, and will be used as a color for materials, as well as for belts, large and small bangle bracelets, purse mountings and other jewelry.

Sequins, in gold and silver, are to be used to a wide extent in evening wear, Kelly declared, forming whole capes and jackets, as well as trimming applied in a variety of ways.

Another new fancy is the large safety pin, in silver or nickel, to be worn in stocks, scarfs and other shortwear.

Angora, used in trimming, as in embroidered bandings and crocheted collars, is still another innovation of the new era. Roman striped velvets in gay colors are being used by the designer for whole dresses of startling brilliance.

One of these, the first of its kind, will be worn by Loretta Young in "Grand Slam," while Mary Brian has one of yellow, blue, purple, red and plum, combined with plain plum-colored velvet in her wardrobe for "Hard to Handle."

There is, however, a catch to the dictum that glitter is the last word in post-election style.

"Materials themselves remain dull," Kelly explained. "They are showing many crepes and new 'hammered' satins in gold and copper shades, but they are dull golds and dull coppers. The glitter in them is achieved by placing the bright, shimmering trimmings over a background that harmonizes but offers no conflicting highlight."

Dainty Lace Once Worn by Gentlemen

Paris, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—Lace was born in the sixteenth century and reached its golden age during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Both men and women sat up nights trying to find more and better ways to use it. They wore it on all their underwear and outerwear. The French Revolution finally ended its sway.

"At a certain court entertainment which he gave at Marly, Louis XIV surprised every woman present," says Max von Boehn, "with the gift of a gown trimmed with most exquisite lace."

"A gentleman is known by the lace he wears" is an old saying and it has been admitted by historians that a masculine fashion plate here might wear a dirty shirt, but that if his jabot and cuffs were not of the finest quality of lace his social prestige was worth no more than a bowl of cherry pits.

Brown Is Blended With Pink Hues

Designers are to be congratulated on the versatility they display in combining colors. The brown shades are especially important; rich chocolate browns combined with pink in evening gowns, the pink a dusty shade that blends nicely with the brown. There are also rich, unusual effects gained by combining brown with black, this being very individual.

In many instances these combinations appear in dinner dresses with one color for the bodice and the other for the skirt.

Dresses Fashioned Entirely of Metals

With the advance of the social season interest in metals is being quickened—dresses fashioned entirely of supple metals, also dresses that combine metal and crepe, the metal used for the bodice section and the jacket. One of the newest versions of the combination of crepe and metal is concerned with the matching idea, the metal dyed to match the crepe.

Chic Street Ensemble

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt chose an unusual black and red street costume this fall. It is a simple tailleur of black corduroy velvet designed with a short belted jacket. The blouse of red jersey adds a bright note to the ensemble.

New Style Raincoats

French and leading American makers of raincoats agree on the importance of the velveteen and corduroy raincoats.

Fashion Ideas Of Architects Are Startling

Chicago, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Hands that designed some of Chicago's skyscrapers took a fling at feminine fashion designing, and the startling results were shown to the world today.

The ideas of seven architects of what women will wear in 1933 include:

A street frock with only one sleeve, a satin afternoon dress with an oilcloth jacket, and an evening gown with elbow-length mitts.

The architects are responsible for much of the building designs at the Century of Progress, Chicago's second World's Fair, which opens next year.

Tall, slim figures are the "sites" on which the architects envisioned their creations. In the length the costumes are extra long, some of the evening gowns ending in trains. The waistline, when not ignored, was lower than this season's.

A straight skintight satin afternoon frock, half of the skirt being white and half yellow attracted attention. Down each side of the skirt was a band of black oilcloth. The costume had a black oilcloth waist-length jacket with puffed elbow sleeves. It was completed by an oilcloth sailor hat.

Another model was a grass green wool street dress with a collar banded with three bands of patent leather and fastened on one side and extending down the left side so as to cover the arm to the elbow. There was no sleeve on that side. The one sleeve had a wide cuff of patent leather.

The gowns, which were made according to "blueprints" and "specifications" were given their premiere showing at a banquet at the Red, White and Blue Club, one of Chicago's society's charity organizations.

Guest or Hostess Gowns

Newest Style In Costumes Is Really Pretty

Mrs. Longworth Has Cost of Black Cloth; Mrs. Stimson in Oxford Gray.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

THE never ceasing seeking for something new by the woman of fashion makes the question of sleeves, of waistlines, of skirt lengths and of fabrics a never ceasing and ever changing one. No fashion fad seems to remain stable for more than a fortnight or two. Then another one rides the sartorial tide to be discarded for something new.

Sleeves today may mean one thing in the world of fashion and something else tomorrow. No sooner had all been written and said and worn in the matter of the short puffed sleeves in the first weeks of the winter than presto, they entirely change their type and have to be written about from an entirely different angle. They were not practical, those sleeves on evening dresses which we all hurried out to buy as soon as we returned from our summer and fall vacations. We wear them yet, of course, for no one flings off a brand-new garment before the season is over, but we all know that the garlanded armhole, semisleeveless dress with elongated shoulder seams and the armhole trimmed with fluffy petaled flowers is the very last high point of fashion and every woman wants to have a gown of this type to wear for her Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday parties.

Men's Views Interpreted.

To the masculine mind it might seem that when one has learned that sleeves are large or that they are small or that they are not at all, or are formed of flowers or fur, the question would be decided for an entire season at least. The fashion designers, however, think differently, and the women who want to look individual and smart think differently, too. Stationary styles and style trends do not mean activity in the world of fashion, dress designing and dress selling. The very latest fashion hint is always a contradiction of the one that has gone before.

Just now the fashionable minded woman is turning admiring eyes on the newest type of afternoon dress which has appeared, worn by our smartest dressed women at some of the social functions of the past week. This "magpie" dress of black velvet and creamy white satin is really pretty. This, of course, is a great relief to those who are reluctant to accept some of the not so pretty recent style innovations. The dress is princess in aspect and has sleeves of white satin, which are to the elbow and slashed across the top, held in place by ends of white silk fringe matching the fringe that drops below the arm. The skirt is slit to a point between the knees and ankles and filled in with white fringe over white satin.

To complete this "magpie" costume there is a tight-wrapped black velvet turban, faced with white and with two white satin roses at the side. One of the youngest matrons, who wore this dress at a recent tea, had a short black velvet wrap to go with it, with a high white satin scarf collar finished with white ermine.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth looked attractive in New York recently in a coat of black cloth smartly cut as to line and with a high collar of soft sealskin. With this she wore a black felt hat with a narrow soft brim.

Mrs. Henry L. Stimson is wearing a tailored suit of Oxford gray, with a cross fox collar. With this she wears a soft drooping black felt hat.

Worn by Mrs. Adams.

Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo had on in Los Angeles at one of the post-election parties to celebrate her husband's election as senator of the United States a dress of Nell rose crepe combined with black velvet. With this she wore a black coat and a small Nell velvet toque. Miss Ellen McAdoo, who will play an important part in the subdebutante world of the Democratic administration, was in brown cloth with brown fur collar and cuffs and a small brown hat.

Mrs. James M. Thomson, of New Orleans, whose husband is slated for either a cabinet portfolio or an ambassadorship, rumors current in Washington indicate, wore at a luncheon at which she was hostess a dress of black crepe de chine with a knobby surface, with a vestee of cream lace. With this Mrs. Thomson wore a bright red velvet closely fitted hat.

Mrs. Hamilton Fish, jr., is wearing an ensemble costume of deep blue trimmed with gray fur. Her hat is also of the becoming shade of blue.

Mrs. George Barnett is wearing a dress of white crepe de chine, made on long draped lines with a brilliant belt and short sleeve effect, trimmed with brilliant bands.

Mrs. Alvin Dodd looks smart in a sport ensemble of brown and tan with a swagger coat having a brown fur collar. With this she wears a small brown wrapped turban.

Mrs. Sol Bloom in Black.

Mrs. Sol Bloom had on recently an ensemble of black cloth with fur collar, cuffs and a small black hat.

Miss Vera Bloom is wearing a youthful fall costume of brown and tan with a small beige hat.

Mrs. Samuel Kauffmann has an ensemble costume of black velvet, trimmed, with fur, with which she wears a small black velvet hat.

Mrs. James J. Davis, who arrived in Washington from Pennsylvania last week, had on a tailored suit of brown wool, made with a plain tailored skirt, a short jacket with a high fur collar on it. With this she wears a brown felt hat.

Mrs. William E. Borah had on one day last week a smart ensemble of mixed tweed, with which she wore a gay scarf and a small closely fitted felt hat.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman had on recently an ensemble suit of brown wool made with a ¾-length coat, and with which she wore a cream satin blouse. Her hat is a closely fitted one of brown velvet and she wears brown furs.

WOMEN WILL CARRY ON TO JUSTIFY FRANCHISE RIGHTS GRANTED TO THEM

Sex Equality Now Chief Aim of Organizations

Capital Clubs, Democratic and Republican, Are Centers of Study—French Women Demand Vote. Mrs. Roosevelt to See Son Inaugurated.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

DEMOCRATIC women are not resting on their laurels, nor Republican women resting on their oars, now that the smoke of battle is over. The motto of the women of both parties seems to be to "live, learn and study." Forum classes and open discussion and lecture courses on national and local politics form an important part of the schedule of the local and national groups of the women of the Republican and Democratic parties.

Since women received the suffrage franchise it has been the aim of the nonpartisan and partisan leaders to instill in the ranks of America women that they must justify their right to a part in the body politic and to carry on real intensive study. So in every local "sewing circle," church and home and school organization, a real attention is paid to the courses in government. The women of the Woman's National Democratic Club in Washington are making that a real center for study, and the women of the District of Columbia League of Republican Women are not one iota discouraged in their determination to carry on.

It has been twenty years since a marching host of women swept up Pennsylvania avenue the day before the Wilson inauguration to demand the voting franchise for women. Some of the marchers, even in those early days, not only demanded the franchise but real sex equality. The vote has been won, of course, but the battle for sex equality is still waging, led by that intrepid band of women under the banner of the National Woman's Party, the same leaders who organized that great suffrage demonstration twenty years ago.

Great progress is seen by those who are in the forefront in the struggle for equality in the recent action of the Civil Service Commission in requesting President Hoover to express his approval of a proposed regulation that would prevent department heads from specifying the sex of persons to be certified for Federal employment. This was done over the objection of Commissioner George R. Wales. The women are recalling that one of the banner bearers of equal rights for women, Miss Jessie Dell, is a member of the commission making the request. This would eliminate from the civil service unfair preference against women.

American suffrage workers are watching with keen interest the campaign being carried on by the women of France for the right of voting. The French sufragists report that they are hopeful that this session of Parliament may pass a law permitting the French women to vote. It is recalled that France is today the only important Nation that excludes Women from a voice in the government of the Nation. The splendid effect of suffrage in the United States and England is being used as the greatest argument for their cause by the French women. The French women wrote their names high on the scroll of fame and service during the World War in their aid to their nation and their allies by their devoted self-sacrifice.

A great man once said "All that I am I owe to my mother." This is particularly true of the Presidents of the United States, it has been revealed from a perusal of biographies.

There has been a vacant chair at the inauguration of many Presidents, but Mrs. James W. Roosevelt, mother of Franklin D. Roosevelt, an energetic grand dame of New York society and leader of women in welfare and social service and patriotic work, will be on the inaugural stand and in the reviewing stand with her distinguished son on March 4. The other mothers who lived to see their sons made President of the United States were only seven, Mary Ball Washington, mother of George Washington; Nellie Conway Madison, Jane Knox Polk, mother of James Knox Polk; Hannah Simpson Grant, mother of Ulysses S. Grant; Eliza Ballou Garfield, mother of James A. Garfield, and Nancy Allison McKinley, mother of William McKinley.

Washington knows Mrs. James W. Roosevelt, for she came to Washington frequently when her son was Assistant Secretary of the Navy and joined in the war work of the local women.

The plea to save historic Monticello in Charlottesville, Va., as a shrine to Thomas Jefferson being made by the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation should rally real support to their aid. The foundation faces a deficit owing to the national financial slump and this home of the writer of the Declaration of Independence may be lost as a national shrine to the American people. It was Mrs. Martin Littleton who first sounded the call to arms to save this historic estate when her husband was a member of the House of Representatives from New York State. Mrs. Littleton carried on her campaign early and late, lecturing under the general title of "My One Wish," the one wish being to save Monticello. The property was finally sold by the last private owner, Jefferson M. Levy, to Jefferson Foundation for $500,000.

Sodality Union Bazaar to Aid Rural Schools

Event Will Be Held in Carroll Hall 3 Days Next Week; Tables Sponsored.

The annual bazaar and supper conducted by the Sodality Union of Washington for the benefit of the rural schools of the archdiocese of Baltimore will take place in Carroll Hall, 924 G street northwest, November 28, 29 and 30, from 5 until 10 p. m.

Great effort is being put forth this year to make the bazaar unusually attractive since on its success will depend the very existence of many of the schools attached to the missions of this archdiocese. The depression is being felt keenly in the rural sections of Maryland and the Sodality Union is constanly receiving requests for aid in maintaining the schools, the buildings for many of which were originally financed by this organization.

The following sodalities are sponsoring tables at the bazaar: St. Aloysius, sr., supper; St. Aloysius, jr., bingo; St. Anthony's, homemade candy; St. Francis Xavier's, novelty; St. Gabriel's, a grand surprise; St. Patrick's, Christmas basket; St. Stephen's, sugar; St. Theresa's, punch and lemonade; Holy Comforter, hams and bacon; Immaculate Conception, soft drinks; Nativity, ice cream and cake.

Other sodalities planning special benefits for the Sodality Union rural work at this time are St. Joseph's, St. Martin's, St. Matthew's and St. Patrick's.

A special turkey supper with turkeys from the Maryland missions will be served each evening in conjunction with the bazaar, from 5 to 7:30 p. m.

The opening evening, Monday, November 28, is to be designated archbishop's night in honor of the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, who is to be the guest of honor. The spiritual directors of the sodalities of the Washington parishes will also be honored on the opening night. Tuesday, November 29, is to be given over to the pastors of the city parishes, together with the prefects of the various sodalities and on the closing night there will be present representatives of numerous Catholic organizations of men and women.

The Sodality Union Literary Club continued its course of study of church history with a lecture on "St. John Damascene and the Iconoclast Heresy," by the Rev. William F. Stricker, at its recent meeting, held in the Aloysian Club. Fr. Stricker, who is attached to St. Matthew's Church, gave an exposition of the nature, causes and extent of the Iconoclast heresy, which was the last of a series of dissensions within the church in its early centuries in regard to matters of faith and doctrine. The part played by St. John Damascene in combating the theories and practices advocated by the Iconoclast heretics was portrayed by the lecturer in his account of the stages of development of the heresy and its final condemnation by the Nicean Council, held at Constantinople in 785.

A book review of "The Anchorhold," by Enid Maud Dinnis, was given by Miss Kirk, a member of the club. A suggestion was made to have delivered as a paper at some future meeting the combined comments and notes of all the members using the books of the circulating library. Each member reading a book is to make some criticism of the volume and these will be combined into an inclusive review.

The next meeting of the club will take the form of an open meeting, with the Rev. Dr. John K. Cartwright lecturing on the "Reformation." Interested non-Catholics will be especially welcomed by the club, part of whose program is the distribution of literature to individuals interested in the teachings of the Catholic Church. Dr. Cartwright will lecture on Friday evening at the Aloysian Club, 47 I street northwest, at 8:15 p. m.

There is great need for a health school for colored children, a modern school for crippled children, sanitarium for tuberculars, sight conservation work, and rest rooms for anemic and underweight children for whom rest periods have been advised. Also, it would be of service to provide teachers for the shut-ins in both homes and hospitals.

Wedding Rings Go For Teeth Fillings

Russians Must Bring Gold to Dentists by Law of Soviet Regime.

Moscow (U.P.).—Patients who want gold fillings in their teeth have to take their own gold with them to the dentist in the Soviet Union. This rule is followed by all dentists in the Soviet Union, due to the government's rigid control of available gold. This control is made necessary to maintain credit for foreign trade obligations.

Wedding rings are the principal objects sacrificed to win relief from toothache. Gold in earrings, lockets, picture frames, medals and similar objects, usually has been sacrificed long before in exchange for food at the Torgsin "Vaguta" shops.

The old-fashioned solid gold wedding rings, widely popular in a past generation normally are held until the last by their owners—held at least, dentists said, until a severe toothache separates the rings from the owners.

The George E. Killeen Unit, No. 28, met at the Killeen Clubhouse last Wednesday night. The president, Mrs. Leon Arnold, presided. There was a large attendance—each member brought something for Thanksgiving baskets. Many ladies present paid their 1933 dues. The birthday party was discussed. Mrs. May Spedden, as rehabilitation chairman, announced a bingo party for hospital fund. Mrs. Marie Dyer announced our Girl Scout Troop was advanced from "knots and tangles" to "cooking and sewing."

The next meeting will be the visitation of department officers and will be held in St. John's Parish Hall, Georgetown. The Killeen colors were in the Armistice Day parade to Arlington, to the Tomb of Woodrow Wilson and ceremonies at the Cathedral.

Vice Commander C. A. Hoglund acted as master of ceremonies for the presentation and Post Commander A. L. Conger accepted the flags on behalf of the post. As each flag was advanced, the national anthem of the country was played by the Thirty-fourth Regiment Band and the flag saluted by the audience. The flags were presented by diplomatic or military representatives of the several countries.

Following the formal exercises dancing was enjoyed until midnight.

It is expected that several other flags will be presented at the regular meeting of the post on January 12. A community card party for members of the post and their friends will be held at the home of Post Commander Conger, 810 Jackson avenue, Takoma Park, on Thursday, December 1.

Vincent B. Costello Post.

More than 300 members attended the last meeting of the post held in the board room of the District Building. Commander Norman R. Grant announced that a report had been received from Fidac headquarters in Paris to the effect that a final check of the targets used in the 1932 international rifle matches conducted by Fidac showed the American Legion team the winner with a score of 1,987. The American team was coached by the post marksmanship officer, Ollie M. Schriver, himself a member of the 1930 and 1931 teams. The gold medal with bar awarded to each member of the winning team was presented to Comrade Schriver by Past Commander Richard A. O'Brien.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS.

John Arthur Shaw, junior vice commander of the department of the District of Columbia, and Capt. Thomas Kirby, chairman of the national legislative committee, will represent Federal Chapter on the national committee appointed by the D. A. V. to investigate further the policy of the director of public buildings and public grounds of the National Capital, of furloughing veterans suffering from service-incurred disabilities for a length of time in excess of the length of the furlough of other guards.

At the next meeting of Federal Chapter, Monday, November 28, it is hoped that officers for the following year can be nominated, elected and installed that same evening, though this is a month previous to the regular election.

The chapter is continuing its intensive drive for new members. Oscar G. Jones, J. J. McNeil, Paul Coran and Fred Schroyer are in the van, but all the members are cooperating and it is confidently expected that by the time of the department convention in January the chapter will have nearly two hundred members in good standing.

Lloyd Wymer, whose term of office as commander of Federal Chapter will expire with the next meeting of that chapter, on November 28, has been in receipt of much commendation during the past week from D. A. V. officials and officials of the United States Employment Service, for the fine work of his chapter during the past year in its drive to place in employment disabled veterans who were able and willing to work and in need of employment. This work, which had its inception in Federal Chapter, has taken on Nation-wide importance with Commander Wymer as one of its mainsprings and he will go out of office with the heartfelt thanks of many disabled men here and elsewhere who are now self-supporting as a result of his efforts and the efforts of his chapter inspired by him. Under Commander Wymer's leadership, Federal Chapter has sprung to the front as one of the leading D. A. V. chapters in this section of the country.

Richard O. Melten, commander of the D. C. Department of the D. A. V., is continuing his strenuous efforts toward obtaining the use of the Pension Office as a combination National Guard Armory and home for local veterans organizations. The D. C. National Guard is the only unit of this organization in the country which does not have adequate armory facilities. Practically all States and countless small communities have provided homes for the various veterans' organizations.

Fourth District Executive Committeeman E. Lee Turner is directing the drive to organize D. A. V. chapters in Berlin and Cambridge, Md., on the Eastern Shore, and will visit Frederick, Hagerstown and Cumberland next month.

Ralph L. Chambers, rehabilitation officer, and John Egense, of the legislative staff, will visit Norfolk, Va., November 21 and 22 to confer on rehabilitation problems with officers of the newly elected Virginia department.

Commander Richard O. Melton urges all service men and all others who may have some work to be done, though it is employment of the most temporary nature, to call Junior Vice Commander John Arthur Shaw, National 8472, Branch 141, in order that he may place a disabled veteran to work. Commander Melton's strenuous efforts to aid unemployed disabled veterans are meeting with considerable success.

With National Commander Conley traveling through the Middle West urging former service men not to join in the numerous "marches" on Washington, Richard O. Melton, jr., commander of the District of Columbia Department of the D. A. V., last week sent out the following statement to all D. A. V. chapters:

"Last spring, when the so-called 'bonus marchers' started, the D. A. V. issued a statement pointing out that no good, legislatively, would come from this plan and that distress would be inevitable. This movement culminated in the regrettable rioting in the shadow of the National Capitol," said Commander Melton.

"The movements now under way from various sections of the country to bring about a high concentration of disgruntled persons are openly being organized by communistic agitators. It was this same ilk, through its disloyalty, that was trying to stab the American Army in the back in the supreme test of the World War. Of all groups which should refrain from any participation in the present 'marches' are honorably discharged soldiers.

"As a matter of common sense, this drive on to Washington will fail to coerce or influence Congress just as the other ones did. That destitution and suffering is inevitable is shown by the fact that the relief agencies in this city are now strained to the breaking point in caring for the problems already at hand.

"Were it not for the suffering the whole proposition could be branded as silly, as the citizens of Washington are determined to feed and house their own instead of thousands of uninvited visitors."

Present plans call for the opening of the hearings within the next week by the joint committee of the Senate and the House on expenditures on veterans' relief. This committee was appointed at the last session of Congress to review this whole matter and it is expected the hearings will continue over several weeks.

Based upon resolutions from the convention at San Diego last June, the D. A. V. will concentrate its strength on the defense of its service connected cases.

A letter during the past week to the Washington office of the D. A. V. has changed the policy of the Veterans' Administration on insurance suits in such a way that it is expected there will be a marked reduction in the number of suits on Government policies.

During the past few years a number of lawyers around the country have gone into the Government insurance litigation on a wholesale scale and tens of thousands of these suits have been filed. In one case a lawyer filed 149 in one day. In building up this business some of the attorneys have explained to the men that for the relatively small cost of the filing expense the veteran would have a chance of winning a decision that would add to his income for many years. However, under the new policy of the administration every veteran whose suit is tried and who loses will have the complete costs of the trial deducted from the future compensation payments.

In the aggregate this will run into large sums and, while the Veterans' Administration, under a Comptroller General's decision must collect this money, the plan will be to make as small deductions as practicable in each monthly check and spread the reimbursement over a long period.

Court calendars everywhere are now crowded and it is expected this new policy will have a material effect in relieving this situation.

M. A. Harlan, former national senior vice commander of the D. A. V. of El Paso, is in Washington at the present, taking up with Government officials problems effecting veterans in Texas.

January 14 has been set as the date of the annual dinner of the District of Columbia Department of the D. A. V. The principal speaker has not yet been selected, but it is expected the gathering will be one of the larget in the history of the organization in Washington.

GOLD STAR MOTHERS.

The first national convention of this organization was held in Washington on November 9 and 10 and officers were elected and installed for a term of two years as follows:

National president, Mrs. Elizabeth Millard, East Rochester, N. Y.; first vice, Mrs. Mary J. Bates, Jackson, Mich.; second vice, Mrs. Margaret E. Warfield, Washington; third vice, Mrs. J. M. Gallagher, Wayne, Pa.; recording secretary, Mrs. E. S. Bruce, Washington; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. L. Hood, Washington; treasurer, Mrs. E. M. H. Guedry, Louisiana; custodian of records, Mrs. R. E. Jacobs, Washington; historian, Mrs. Leona P. Stahl, California; chaplain, Mrs. W. J. Seelye, Washington; color bearers, Mrs. Delia Barber, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Fannie F. Meeks, Washington.

This ticket, selected to give representation to the greatest number of States possible, was submitted to the convention and adopted without a dissenting vote and the secretary was authorized to cast a unanimous vote for the officers named. Admittedly this was an unusual proceeding for a group of women gathered from many States and meeting in national convention for the first time. Mrs. Mary K. Killeen, past first vice president, installed the officers.

The convention closed with a banquet at the Hamilton Hotel on Thursday night but the visiting mothers remained over Friday to participate in the Armistice Day ceremonies.

Simultaneously at noon on Friday Mrs. Millard, the national president, placed a floral star, the emblem of the order, on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington, while Mrs. Mary J. Bates, the newly elected first vice president, laid the tribute of Jackson Unit, No. 1, of the order, and George Gordon Selbold, a Gold Star Father and honorary member of the national, placed, for himself and Mrs. Selbold, a beautiful star as a tribute of their hero son, George Vaughn Selbold.

A wreath was also placed on the tomb of the war President, Woodrow Wilson, by the organization, Mrs. Millard and the color bearers, Mrs. Delia Barber and Mrs. Fannie F. Meeks, in their white and gold military uniforms, standing forth conspicuously in the colorful parade that wended its way through the vaulted corridors of Bethlehem Chapel in the National Cathedral, treading to the chant of the vested choir. It was a most impressive ceremony.

Twenty-eight of the visiting mothers were taken by bus to all points of interest, including Mount Vernon, and the first national convention of the American Gold Star Mothers was proclaimed a grand success. Those in attendance will go to their homes in various States with a new determination to make this exclusively Gold Star Mothers' organization a worthwhile one.

A group of Gold Star Mothers, members of the national organization, met at the Hamilton Hotel Tuesday night and formed a local chapter, to be known as the Grace Darling Selbold Chapter—named in honor of the founder and first national president.

The chapter will meet twice monthly, on the first and third Tuesday, at 8 p. m., at headquarters in the Hamilton Hotel.

The officers elected to serve for the first year are: President, Mrs. Mary K. Killeen; first vice president, Mrs. W. J. Seelye; second vice president, Mrs. Edna Boardman; third vice president, Mrs. Catherine Barrack; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Josephine Talks; historian, Mrs. Carrie J. Searl; chaplain, Mrs. E. M. Nash; color bearers, Mrs. Delia Barber and Mrs. Fannie F. Meeks.

The national custodian of records, Mrs. R. E. Jacobs, will act for the local chapter. A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws which will be submitted at the next meeting.

Mrs. A. C. De Arkland, a member at large, was a guest of the evening and on her return to her home city, New Orleans, will organize a chapter there, the majority of the Gold Star Mothers of that city already being enrolled in the national organization.

The organization known as "The Seven," compriaing the welfare organizations that served the boys of the A. E. F. and those on this side during the war, already observes this custom. Only one emblem is placed for the seven organizations and each in turn is nominated to take charge of the program for that day. This year the Y. W. C. A. had that honor.

The next meeting of the Grace Darling Selbold Chapter of the American Gold Star Mothers will be on Tuesday, December 6, at 8 p. m., at the Hamilton Hotel.

WAR MOTHERS.

Bicentennial Chapter.

The last meeting of Bicentennial Chapter was held at the Hamilton Hotel on Friday. Two new members were installed by the president, Mrs. Jenny M. Sauls, and the sergeant at arms, Mrs. Julia Hooker. The mothers were Mrs. Jessie L. Richards, mother of Vincent Richards, and Mrs. Laura Harvey, mother of Joseph O. Harvey.

Mrs. Sue Sharp has recently installed a new chapter in Wheeling, W. Va., with 29 members. On this evening the Bicentennial Chapter was invited to visit the District of Columbia Chapter by Mrs. Joseph Phillips, acting president, to renew old friendships and to meet the national officers who were in Washington to see the new home, located at 1527 New Hampshire avenue, and to attend an executive meeting of the board.

In December Mrs. Katherine Doyle will be hostess to the mothers at a card party at her home on K street northeast. Mrs. Nellie Clubb, color bearer, will shortly entertain the chapter at her home on East Capitol street, at a bingo party.

A gala time was had at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Greer, the occasion being the celebration of the birthday of Brother William A. Greer, member and past grand of Friendship Lodge, No. 12. Brother Greer had extended an invitation to the lodge members to be present at his home on last Thursday evening. The members of the lodge, accompanied by their wives and sweethearts, journeyed to his home and arrived there at 6:15 p. m., to partake of a splendid turkey dinner.

The tables were filled with the good things of life for the inner man, and the spacious and many rooms were beautifully decorated with leaves and flowers of every description. Over 60 guests were seated at the tables for the dinner, and it was heartily enjoyed by all.

Following the dinner, Past Grand Master J. Burton Kincer, of the lodge, took charge, and acted as toastmaster of the evening. Speeches were made by many officers of the lodge, tendering tribute to Brother Greer for his service to the lodge. Past Grand Master W. E. Lawson also spoke and tendered him a token of esteem on behalf of himself and Past Grand Masters Harry L. Andresen and Elmer Cummings, in the form of a beautiful Sheaffer pencil.

Past Grand Master Andresen also addressed Brother Greer and sang him a song appropriate to his birthday. The lodge as a whole presented to Brother Greer a beautiful silver pitcher, the gift being ably presented by Past Grand Elton J. Layton. Grand Warden Charles B. Lampe, on behalf of the lodge, presented to Mrs. Greer a large basket of chrysanthemums.

Brother Greer turned the tables on the guests by presenting to the noble grand a large gavel for the noble grand's use in the lodge. The gavel, carved from one of Brother Greer's trees on the farm, was engraved with inscriptions. He also presented prizes to lucky guests who had drawn lucky numbers from those distributed by him during the evening. An orchestra played several selections during the evening under the direction of Brother Doolan. Miss Fannie Buck and Mrs. Doolan contributed solos. Prof. Charles Myers also contributed to the evening's entertainment with a horoscope reading of many of the guests.

A rare occasion was presented last Tuesday evening, when Past Grand Edwin R. Armentrout of Mount Pleasant Lodge, No. 29, was honored by the lodge members at their regular meeting. Brother Armentrout was a charter member of Fort Republic Lodge, No. 67, of Virginia, and later became a member of Mount Pleasant Lodge, No. 29, and has served as secretary of the lodge for many years. His membership in the order has been approximately over a period of 43 years. The members of the lodge turned out in large numbers to honor this worthy brother, who has been so faithful to the lodge and the fraternity.

Addresses were made by the grand master and the grand officers of the Grand Lodge and also by Grand Patriarch S. P. Frye.

Tribute was paid to Brother Armentrout by Past Grand Sire Ernest W. Bradford. Past Grand Master Edmund H. Allen, of Virginia, and Past Grand John W. Gulledge, on behalf of the lodge and in a stirring address, presented Brother Armentrout with a 40-year veteran's jewel. Past Grand Albert G. Keen, of the lodge, presided as chairman of the occasion and in his opening remarks paid tribute to Brother Armentrout and presented him with a beautiful basket of flowers.

Past Grand William E. Andrews, of the lodge, also paid tribute to the brother and extolled his work in the lodge. Brother Armentrout responded to these many tributes feelingly and stated that he sincerely appreciated all that had been said, although he thought he did not deserve the tribute given him by the many brothers present.

A splendid program of entertainment was presented following the testimonial rendered to Brother Armentrout which was enjoyed by all present.

Harmony Lodge.

The grand visitation of the Grand Lodge to Harmony Lodge, No. 17, will take place on Wednesday. Carl H. Claudy, master, promises a surprise program, with unusual features, one of which is unique, never having been seen in any lodge in this jurisdiction.

Visitations in Harmony Lodge have always been colorful affairs, with varied programs of entertainment for the distinguished guests of the lodge. This year's ceremony promises to be no less interesting than in previous years. Committees have been hard at work preparing, decorating the room, arranging for the music, settling details and, it is whispered, providing for the importation of foreign talent.

The "surprise feature," which the master will not disclose in advance, is hinted by those who know to be a mystery, the solution of which will puzzle even the learned.

The visitation will begin promptly at 8 p. m. and a large audience is confidently expected.

Fellowship Club.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK IN WASHINGTON PARENT-TEACHER ASSOCIATIONS

All material for this column must be in the State office, Room 501, 1201 Sixteenth street northwest, by the first mail on Wednesday preceding Sunday on which publication is desired.

The monthly conference, combined with the health institute, was held during two sessions in the auditorium of the Interior Department Tuesday, commencing at 10 a. m. The program, as published, was carried out in detail. Speakers at the morning session were Mrs. Katherine M. Cook, chief of the special problem division of the department of education, and Miss Elise Martens, specialist in the education of the exceptional child.

Mrs. Cook welcomed the members of the congress to the building and stressed the advantage of the getting together of parent and expert in dealing with the problems of the child. She spoke of the handicap to education of drastic economies, but said it might help in teaching the judicious elimination of things not worth while.

Miss Martens displayed a chart which showed graphically the goal for the education of the exceptional child, not only those above normal, but also below, the ideal for both groups being health, physical, mental and spiritual. She described what might be and what has been done toward furthering this aim in the way of education. At the close of her talk she answered questions.

Miss Bottomley, of the national office, spoke briefly in presenting the certificates to the State chairman for distribution. These honors were given out to the representatives of the various schools.

At the afternoon session, after the transaction of business, at which time substantial student aid contributions were reported, Mr. Robert L. Haycock, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, addressed the assembly on specific needs of the department for carrying on this work for the exceptional child, and what the District is doing for handicapped children. There is great need for a health school for colored children, a modern school for crippled children, sanitarium for tuberculars, sight conservation work, and rest rooms for anemic and underweight children for whom rest periods have been advised. Also, it would be of service to provide teachers for the shut-ins in both homes and hospitals.

Mrs. W. T. Bannerman, national legislative chairman, summarized the program, and in doing so paid tribute to the exceptional activity of the summer round-up chairman. The six points that she made in conclusion were: 1. Get together with experts. 2. Study conditions. 3. Formulate a program. 4. Secure funds. 5. Accomplish the work. 6. Evaluate.

McNeil, Paul Coran and Fred Schroyer are in the van, but all the members are cooperating and it is confidently expected that by the time of the department convention in January the chapter will have nearly two hundred members in good standing.

Lloyd Wymer, whose term of office as commander of Federal Chapter will expire with the next meeting of that chapter, on November 28, has been in receipt of much commendation during the past week from D. A. V. officials and officials of the United States Employment Service, for the fine work of his chapter during the past year in its drive to place in employment disabled veterans who were able and willing to work and in need of employment. This work, which had its inception in Federal Chapter, has taken on Nation-wide importance with Commander Wymer as one of its mainsprings and he will go out of office with the heartfelt thanks of many disabled men here and elsewhere who are now self-supporting as a result of his efforts and the efforts of his chapter inspired by him. Under Commander Wymer's leadership, Federal Chapter has sprung to the front as one of the leading D. A. V. chapters in this section of the country.

Richard O. Melton, commander of the D. C. Department of the D. A. V., is continuing his strenuous efforts toward obtaining the use of the Pension Office as a combination National Guard Armory and home for local veterans organizations. The D. C. National Guard is the only unit of this organization in the country which does not have adequate armory facilities. Practically all States and countless small communities have provided homes for the various veterans' organizations.

Fourth District Executive Committeeman E. Lee Turner is directing the drive to organize D. A. V. chapters in Berlin and Cambridge, Md., on the Eastern Shore, and will visit Frederick, Hagerstown and Cumberland next month.

Ralph L. Chambers, rehabilitation officer, and John Egense, of the legislative staff, will visit Norfolk, Va., November 21 and 22 to confer on rehabilitation problems with officers of the newly elected Virginia department.

Commander Richard O. Melton urges all service men and all others who may have some work to be done, though it is employment of the most temporary nature, to call Junior Vice Commander John Arthur Shaw, National 8472, Branch 141, in order that he may place a disabled veteran to work. Commander Melton's strenuous efforts to aid unemployed disabled veterans are meeting with considerable success.

With National Commander Conley traveling through the Middle West urging former service men not to join in the numerous "marches" on Washington, Richard O. Melton, jr., commander of the District of Columbia Department of the D. A. V., last week sent out the following statement to all D. A. V. chapters:

"Last spring, when the so-called 'bonus marchers' started, the D. A. V. issued a statement pointing out that no good, legislatively, would come from this plan and that distress would be inevitable. This movement culminated in the regrettable rioting in the shadow of the National Capitol," said Commander Melton.

"The movements now under way from various sections of the country to bring about a high concentration of disgruntled persons are openly being organized by communistic agitators. It was this same ilk, through its disloyalty, that was trying to stab the American Army in the back in the supreme test of the World War. Of all groups which should refrain from any participation in the present 'marches' are honorably discharged soldiers.

"As a matter of common sense, this drive on to Washington will fail to coerce or influence Congress just as the other ones did. That destitution and suffering is inevitable is shown by the fact that the relief agencies in this city are now strained to the breaking point in caring for the problems already at hand.

"Were it not for the suffering the whole proposition could be branded as silly, as the citizens of Washington are determined to feed and house their own instead of thousands of uninvited visitors."

Present plans call for the opening of the hearings within the next week by the joint committee of the Senate and the House on expenditures on veterans' relief. This committee was appointed at the last session of Congress to review this whole matter and it is expected the hearings will continue over several weeks.

Based upon resolutions from the convention at San Diego last June, the D. A. V. will concentrate its strength on the defense of its service connected cases.

A letter during the past week to the Washington office of the D. A. V. has changed the policy of the Veterans' Administration on insurance suits in such a way that it is expected there will be a marked reduction in the number of suits on Government policies.

During the past few years a number of lawyers around the country have gone into the Government insurance litigation on a wholesale scale and tens of thousands of these suits have been filed. In one case a lawyer filed 149 in one day. In building up this business some of the attorneys have explained to the men that for the relatively small cost of the filing expense the veteran would have a chance of winning a decision that would add to his income for many years. However, under the new policy of the administration every veteran whose suit is tried and who loses will have the complete costs of the trial deducted from the future compensation payments.

In the aggregate this will run into large sums and, while the Veterans' Administration, under a Comptroller General's decision must collect this money, the plan will be to make as small deductions as practicable in each monthly check and spread the reimbursement over a long period.

Court calendars everywhere are now crowded and it is expected this new policy will have a material effect in relieving this situation.

M. A. Harlan, former national senior vice commander of the D. A. V. of El Paso, is in Washington at the present, taking up with Government officials problems effecting veterans in Texas.

January 14 has been set as the date of the annual dinner of the District of Columbia Department of the D. A. V. The principal speaker has not yet been selected. But it is expected the gathering will be one of the largest in the history of the organization in Washington.

GOLD STAR MOTHERS.

The first national convention of this organization was held in Washington on November 9 and 10 and officers were elected and installed for a term of two years as follows:

National president, Mrs. Elizabeth Millard, East Rochester, N. Y.; first vice, Mrs. Mary J. Bates, Jackson, Mich.; second vice, Mrs. Margaret E. Warfield, Washington; third vice, Mrs. J. M. Gallagher, Wayne, Pa.; recording secretary, Mrs. E. S. Bruce, Washington; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. L. Hood, Washington; treasurer, Mrs. E. M. H. Guedry, Louisiana; custodian of records, Mrs. R. E. Jacobs, Washington; historian, Mrs. Leona P. Stahl, California; chaplain, Mrs. W. J. Seelye, Washington; color bearers, Mrs. Delia Barber, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Fannie F. Meeks, Washington.

This ticket, selected to give representation to the greatest number of States possible, was submitted to the convention and adopted without a dissenting vote and the secretary was authorized to cast a unanimous vote for the officers named. Admittedly this was an unusual proceeding for a group of women gathered from many States and meeting in national convention for the first time. Mrs. Mary E. Killeen, past first vice president, installed the officers.

The convention closed with a banquet at the Hamilton Hotel on Thursday night but the visiting mothers remained over Friday to participate in the Armistice Day ceremonies.

Simultaneously at noon on Friday Mrs. Millard, the national president, placed a floral star, the emblem of the order, on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington, while Mrs. Mary J. Bates, the newly elected first vice president, laid the tribute of Jackson Unit, No. 1, of the order, and George Gordon Selbold, a Gold Star Father and honorary member of the national, placed, for himself and Mrs. Selbold, a beautiful star as a tribute of their hero son, George Vaughn Selbold.

A wreath was also placed on the tomb of the war President, Woodrow Wilson, by the organization, Mrs. Millard and the color bearers, Mrs. Delia Barber and Mrs. Fannie F. Meeks, in their white and gold military uniforms, standing forth conspicuously in the colorful parade that wended its way through the vaulted corridors of Bethlehem Chapel in the National Cathedral, treading to the chant of the vested choir. It was a most impressive ceremony.

Twenty-eight of the visiting mothers were taken by bus to all points of interest, including Mount Vernon, and the first national convention of the American Gold Star Mothers was proclaimed a grand success. Those in attendance will go to their homes in various States with a new determination to make this exclusively Gold Star Mothers' organization a worthwhile one.

A group of Gold Star Mothers, members of the national organization, met at the Hamilton Hotel Tuesday night and formed a local chapter, to be known as the Grace Darling Selbold Chapter—named in honor of the founder and first national president.

The chapter will meet twice monthly, on the first and third Tuesday, at 8 p. m., at headquarters in the Hamilton Hotel.

The officers elected to serve for the first year are: President, Mrs. Mary K. Killeen; first vice president, Mrs. W. J. Seelye; second vice president, Mrs. Edna Boardman; third vice president, Mrs. Catherine Barrack; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Josephine Talks; historian, Mrs. Carrie J. Searl; chaplain, Mrs. E. M. Nash; color bearers, Mrs. Delia Barber and Mrs. Fannie F. Meeks.

The national custodian of records, Mrs. R. E. Jacobs, will act for the local chapter. A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws which will be submitted at the next meeting.

Mrs. A. C. De Arkland, a member at large, was a guest of the evening and on her return to her home city, New Orleans, will organize a chapter there, the majority of the Gold Star Mothers of that city already being enrolled in the national organization.

The organization known as "The Seven," comprising the welfare organizations that served the boys of the A. E. F. and those on this side during the war, already observes this custom. Only one emblem is placed for the seven organizations and each in turn is nominated to take charge of the program for that day. This year the Y. W. C. A. had that honor.

The next meeting of the Grace Darling Selbold Chapter of the American Gold Star Mothers will be on Tuesday, December 6, at 8 p. m., at the Hamilton Hotel.

WAR MOTHERS.

Bicentennial Chapter.

The last meeting of Bicentennial Chapter was held at the Hamilton Hotel on Friday. Two new members were installed by the president, Mrs. Jenny M. Sauls, and the sergeant at arms, Mrs. Julia Hooker. The mothers were Mrs. Jessie L. Richards, mother of Vincent Richards, and Mrs. Laura Harvey, mother of Joseph O. Harvey.

Mrs. Sue Sharp has recently installed a new chapter in Wheeling, W. Va., with 29 members. On this evening the Bicentennial Chapter was invited to visit the District of Columbia Chapter by Mrs. Joseph Phillips, acting president, to renew old friendships and to meet the national officers who were in Washington to see the new home, located at 1527 New Hampshire avenue, and to attend an executive meeting of the board.

In December Mrs. Katherine Doyle will be hostess to the mothers at a card party at her home on K street northeast. Mrs. Nellie Clubb, color bearer, will shortly entertain the chapter at her home on East Capitol street, at a bingo party.

NOTES OF THE I. O. O. F.

On Wednesday evening Grand Master Thomas C. Mettler, accompanied by his official staff, will visit Friendship Lodge, No. 12, meeting in their own hall at 922 Twentieth street northwest. Friendship Lodge, No. 12, is the home lodge of Past Grand Master J. Burton Kincer, Past Grand Master James A. Watt, the oldest living past grand master of the jurisdiction, and also Grand Warden Charles B. Lampe. Friendship Lodge is noted for its annual visitations and this year will be no exception to the rule. The noble grand extends a cordial invitation to all members of the jurisdiction to be present on this occasion and all are advised to come early as the capacity of the lodgeroom is limited. The grand officers will enter promptly at 8:30 o'clock.

The Rebekah anniversary committee will hold a final meeting on Wednesday evening, November 30, at which time the reports of all subcommittees will be reported and all matters closed. Sister Emma Treas Strobel, chairman of the committee, urges the attendance of all representatives of this committee, subordinates and Rebekahs and the encampments. The committee will meet in the I. O. O. F. Temple at 8 o'clock.

The last official visitation of the year will be to the grand master's own lodge, Langdon Lodge, No. 26, on Friday evening, December 2.

Tomarsow evening, Grand Master Mettler, accompanied by his official line, will accompany Sister President Belle C. Thomson and her corps of officers on her annual official visit to the mother Rebekah lodge of the jurisdiction, Naomi Rebekah Lodge, No. 1, meeting in the I. O. O. F. Temple.

A gala time was had at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Greer, the occasion being the celebration of the birthday of Brother William A. Greer, member and past grand of Friendship Lodge, No. 12. Brother Greer had extended an invitation to the lodge members to be present at his home on last Thursday evening. The members of the lodge, accompanied by their wives and sweethearts, journeyed to his home and arrived there at 6:15 p. m., to partake of a splendid turkey dinner.

The tables were filled with the good things of life for the inner man, and the spacious and many rooms were beautifully decorated with leaves and flowers of every description. Over 60 guests were seated at the tables for the dinner, and it was heartily enjoyed by all.

Following the dinner, Past Grand Master J. Burton Kincer, of the lodge, took charge, and acted as toastmaster of the evening. Speeches were made by many officers of the lodge, tendering tribute to Brother Greer for his service to the lodge. Past Grand Master W. E. Lawson also spoke and tendered him a token of esteem on behalf of himself and Past Grand Masters Harry L. Andresen and Elmer Cummings, in the form of a beautiful Sheaffer pencil.

Past Grand Master Andresen also addressed Brother Greer and sang him a song appropriate to his birthday. The lodge as a whole presented to Brother Greer a beautiful silver pitcher, the gift being ably presented by Past Grand Elton J. Layton. Grand Warden Charles B. Lampe, on behalf of the lodge, presented to Mrs. Greer a large basket of chrysanthemums.

Brother Greer turned the tables on the guests by presenting to the noble grand a large gavel for the noble grand's use in the lodge. The gavel, carved from one of Brother Greer's trees on the farm, was engraved with inscriptions. He also presented prizes to lucky guests who had drawn lucky numbers from those distributed by him during the evening. An orchestra played several selections during the evening under the direction of Brother Doolan. Miss Fannie Buck and Mrs. Doolan contributed solos. Prof. Charles Myers also contributed to the evening's entertainment with a horoscope reading of many of the guests.

A rare occasion was presented last Tuesday evening, when Past Grand Edwin R. Armentrout of Mount Pleasant Lodge, No. 29, was honored by the lodge members at their regular meeting. Brother Armentrout was a charter member of Fort Republic Lodge, No. 67, of Virginia, and later became a member of Mount Pleasant Lodge, No. 29, and has served as secretary of the lodge for many years. His membership in the order has been approximately over a period of 43 years. The members of the lodge turned out in large numbers to honor this worthy brother, who has been so faithful to the lodge and the fraternity.

Grand Master Thomas C. Mettler was present, as well as Deputy Grand Master Morris L. Dreeben, Grand Warden Charles B. Lampe, Grand Secretary Harry L. Andresen, Grand Treasurer James E. Chamberlain, Grand Marshal James H. Solt, Grand Chaplain Ashlan F. Harlan, Grand Conductor Roscoe Jenkins and Grand Herald Linwood E. Donaldson. Grand Patriarch Samuel F. Frye was also present.

Addresses were made by the grand master and the grand officers of the Grand Lodge and also by Grand Patriarch S. F. Frye.

Tribute was paid to Brother Armentrout by Past Grand Sire Ernest W. Bradford. Past Grand Master Edmund H. Allen, of Virginia, and Past Grand John W. Gulledge, on behalf of the lodge and in a stirring address, presented Brother Armentrout with a 40-year veteran's jewel. Past Grand Albert G. Keen, of the lodge, presided as chairman of the occasion and in his opening remarks paid tribute to Brother Armentrout and presented him with a beautiful basket of flowers.

Past Grand William E. Andrews, of the lodge, also paid tribute to the brother and extolled his work in the lodge. Brother Armentrout responded to these many tributes feelingly and stated that he sincerely appreciated all that had been said, although he thought he did not deserve the tribute given him by the many brothers present.

A splendid program of entertainment was presented following the testimonial rendered to Brother Armentrout which was enjoyed by all present.

Masonic Clubs

Harmony Lodge.

The grand visitation of the Grand Lodge to Harmony Lodge, No. 17, will take place on Wednesday. Carl H. Claudy, master, promises a surprise program, with unusual features, one of which is unique, never having been seen in any lodge in this jurisdiction.

Visitations in Harmony Lodge have always been colorful affairs, with varied programs of entertainment for the distinguished guests of the lodge. This year's ceremony promises to be no less interesting than in previous years. Committees have been hard at work preparing, decorating the room, arranging for the music, settling details and, it is whispered, providing for the importation of foreign talent.

The "surprise feature," which the master will not disclose in advance, is hinted by those who know to be a mystery, the solution of which will puzzle even the learned.

The visitation will begin promptly at 8 p. m. and a large audience is confidently expected.

Fellowship Club.

The Fellowship Club of Master Masons in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will meet in the east room, Hamilton Hotel, tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock. This being the first regular meeting to be held on Monday evening, and in its new quarters, the club will hold "house-warming night." At this meeting there will be received into membership 25 new members. The initiation work will be put on by the degree team of the Craftsman's Club, under the direction of Charles Taylor.

The principal address of the evening will be by the past grand master of Masons in the District of Columbia, Grata E. Dunkum. Invitations have been extended to James H. Douglas, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Alvin W. Hall, Bureau of Engraving and Printing director, and Assistant Directors Clark R. Long and Jesse E. Swigart, and other officials of the Treasury and Bureau of Engraving and Printing. All Master Masons of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing have been invited to this meeting. An interesting program has been provided for the evening and a large attendance is assured.

Famous Naturalist Dispels Popular Belief

Portland, Oreg. (U.P.).—W. L. Finley, Oregon naturalist, who has gained international fame, disputes the popular belief that a bear scoops fish out of the water with his paw.

Finley should know. He spent many weeks last summer on Admiralty Island, southeastern Alaska, watching Kodiak bears go through their paces. He has also studied and filmed hundreds of other bears of varying nationalities.

GEN. BISHOP TELLS OF FIELD ARTILLERY

Automatic Rifles and Machine Guns Urged for Defense Against Air Attack.

"War experience and extended service tests indicate that Field Artillery troops must be armed to a limited extent with automatic rifles, in addition to machine guns, for local defense, principally of columns, against aerial attacks," reads the annual report of Maj. Gen. Harry G. Bishop, chief of Field Artillery, released last week.

Maj. Gen. Bishop.

"The rifle used for this purpose should be the same as that adopted for the Infantry. Pending development by the Infantry of a suitable rifle and final decision in this matter, recommendation has been made to continue the use of the Browning automatic rifle.

Other extracts from the report are as follows:

"Field Artillery troops are reported to have met all demands made upon them in the training of civilian components. New service practice reports indicate that service practice has been carefully planned and carried out. The maximum training is derived from the use of service as well as subcaliber ammunition."

Radio Equipment.

"New radio equipment, recently issued to the Field Artillery, has made the communication system of the Field Artillery more reliable. It assures better and quicker support for the unit supported.

"Field Artillery troops have again demonstrated their ability to keep up with other troops on the march under all conditions of terrain and weather. The training literature of the Field Artillery has been completely brought up to date."

"An Air Corps type machine gun mount has been tested by the Field Artillery board and found unsuitable for Field Artillery use. A very promising two-man mount has been developed by the board and is now being tested. The ordnance department has under development two types of .30-caliber mounts which are to be manufactured and tested in the near future.

"All active pack artillery units have now been equipped with the new 75 mm. howitzer. Extended service tests of the 75 mm. gun in the horse artillery have resulted in the conclusion that this gun has too much weight behind the team to keep up with horsed cavalry under service conditions. Therefore, a pilot high-speed, split trail carriage for the 75 mm. howitzer for use with horsed cavalry is under construction at Rock Island Arsenal and should be ready for test in August.

75 MM. French Guns.

"The large stock of 75 MM. French guns, now in reserve and whose use would be required in the early stages of a major mobilization, has necessitated efforts to modernize their carriages.

"The 155-MM. howitzer has been tested by the Field Artillery board and the construction of a new pilot recommended.

"As the result of test of field ambulances and an experimental mountain wagon, the use of the former has been recommended in horse-drawn units for the transportation of command post and signal equipment. The pneumatic-tired ammunition wagons now being developed may replace this type of equipment.

"Due to the continuous and rapid improvement in motor transport and lack of funds for test purposes, the subject of motor transportation is still somewhat unsettled. Issue of new radio sets has been made to all active units. Motor transport for division light artillery now appears practicable."

Lieut. Comdr. Elshin Visitor in Alexandria

Lieut. Comdr. Alexander J. Elshin, commander in chief of the Russian Wounded and Disabled Veterans of the World War, arrived in Washington last Thursday and is now visiting a friend in Alexandria.

Lieut. Comdr. Elshin came here after attending the meeting of the executive council of the American Legion at Indianapolis. He was commander of the Twentieth Corps, Imperial Russian Army, which gave such a splendid account of itself on the eastern front.

Trained Citizenry Called U. S. Need

College Group Told Education for Higher Studies Should Be Curbed.

Urging the development of scientifically trained citizenry rather than the preparation for research and higher studies in American colleges and universities, Dr. Walter E. Clark, president of the National Association of State Universities, officially opened the thirty-seventh annual meeting of that organization at the Mayflower Hotel Thursday.

Dr. Clark said that his solution would provide wider democratic control and responsibility, greater leisure, larger financial return to the working classes and better investment opportunities for the workers.

A report presented to the association by its military affairs committee recommends that the matter of compulsory military training be left to the determination of each individual institution. This report was presented by Dr. Arthur G. Crane, president of the University of Wyoming.

Egyptians Enter University of Texas

Austin, Tex. (U. P.).—Three members of the Department of Agriculture of the Egyptian government have entered the University of Texas to make research in the cotton industry as carried on in the United States.

The three men, M. F. Moussa, Salah-el Din Gazzar and Hassan Mawardi, all of Cairo, are making a study of the cotton industry in the leading cotton nations of the world. From these studies they hope to raise Egypt's rank as a cotton producing nation.

GAS MASK FIGHTS ONION FUMES

A soldier on K. P. duty dons his gas mask as protection against the deadly fumes of the onion which he is preparing as a part of the Thanksgiving menu to be served on his post next Thursday.

RESERVE CORPS NOTES

By STAFF SERGT. A. S. DeAGRO.

Regulations and policies governing the termination of appointment in the Officers Reserve Corps, of reserve officers while residing or traveling abroad, have been issued in previous memorandums or circulars by the War Department. Instructions governing the reappointment in the Officers Reserve Corps, after a loss of reserve status through residence in foreign countries issued by the War Department on November 3, 1930, still apply.

When a reserve officer, not reappointed because of absence in a foreign country, returns to the limits of the United States, or its possessions, and applies therefor, he will be considered for appointment in the grade and section he held at the time of termination of his last appointment. In such cases neither professional examination nor vacancy will be required and suspension of appointments in the particular grade and section will not apply. Appointments under this policy will be made with eligibility for promotion, assignment and active duty only when the former Reserve officer, had he been reappointed at the termination of his last appointment, would have been eligible for those privileges by reason of having qualified under existing regulations, otherwise the appointment will be without these privileges. Applications for new appointments under this policy, should be submitted to the corps area commander on the forms prescribed for original appointment.

Regular Army officers serving as chiefs of staff of reserve divisions are required to make inspections of all units of their divisions and to render complete reports on them to the corps area commander. This will result in complete and more helpful supervision. In most localities inactive duty training has been given little publicity. This training takes place quietly during the winter months. A picture of the reserve as a whole is incomplete without note being taken of the rapidly increasing importance and extent of this form of training in the District of Columbia. It is the principal means of imparting theoretical knowledge of all phases of military affairs to the Reserve Corps.

It goes on during the fall, winter and spring, and takes the form of conferences conducted by Regular Army instructors and as individual work by Reserve officers on extension school courses. It is required, as a rule, by all officers or units before they go to camp. This avoids to a large degree the teaching of rudiments and theory at a time when work should be practical.

The importance of this inactive duty training instruction can hardly be overestimated, and it is increasingly so since recent regulations require a certificate of capacity for all promotions, the examinations for which are based chiefly on these courses. This is resulting already in a tremendous increase of activity in this form of training. It should also be said that both the substance and administration of the extension courses are being greatly improved and the whole project, which was new and unfamiliar to the Army, is rounding into satisfactory and absolutely essential activity.

Five inactive training conferences will be conducted at Reserve headquarters during the week. Tomorrow night District Quartermaster Corps officers will meet at local headquarters. Maj. L. A. Nickerson, of the Ordnance Department, will lecture on the important subject of "Strategic and Raw Materials," and Capt. F. V. Fitzgerald will discuss "Plans Charged to the Quartermaster Corps." District officers of the Judge Advocate General's department will meet on the same evening. Maj. E. E. Johnson, of the Judge Advocate General's department, will lecture on "Work of Claims and Bonds Section of the Judge Advocate General's Office."

Maj. E. B. Gray, the unit instructor of District Coast Artillery units, assisted by Capt. T. J. Betts, of the Office of the Chief of Staff, will conduct the conference for District Coast Artillery officers Tuesday night. "Mobilization," taken from lesson 3, of the Coast Artillery extension courses, will be discussed by Maj. Gray, while Capt. Betts will lecture on "Supply and Mess Management." Air Corps officers will meet on the same evening in the projection room of the Chief of Air Corps, Munitions Building. This will be the first of a series of conferences to take place on the fourth Tuesday of each month for Air Corps officers. Two conferences every month during the inactive training season were unanimously agreed upon by the reserve officers attending the conference of November 9.

Capt. George D. Kenney, Air Corps, on duty at the Army War College, has volunteered his services to conduct the conferences to be held on the fourth Tuesdays, and for Tuesday night he has selected "Attack Aviation" as his subject.

The Chemical Warfare Service Reserve officers will meet on Friday evening. First Lieut. P. D. Powers, of the Chemical Warfare Service, will conduct the conference on "Chemical Supply and Manufacturing Problems."

Second Lieut. Harris B. Hull, of 2802 Twenty-seventh street northwest, has been transferred from the Infantry to the Military Intelligence Reserve. Lieut. Hull will probably be assigned to the Press Relations Division of the Military Intelligence Department.

Lieut. Col. Richard J. Donnelly, Adjutant General's Reserve, of 10 Tenth street northeast, and Capt. Joseph A. Walsh, Corps of Engineers Reserve, have not been tendered reappointments in the Officers' Reserve Corps in view of the fact that they have been placed on the emergency officers' retired list.

Maj. Overton C. Luxford, Adjutant General's Reserve, of 4617 Arkansas avenue northwest, and Theodore R. Snyder, Ordnance Reserve, of the United States Chamber of Commerce, have been reappointed in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Wallace S. Stanley, of 1681 Thirty-first street northwest, has been appointed a second lieutenant of infantry. Lieut. Stanley is a graduate of the Blue Course, Citizens' Military Training Camps and a former member of the Enlisted Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Thaddeus W. Mermal, Signal Reserve, of 1900 F street northwest, has been transferred from the Third Corps Area Assignment Group to the Army and Service Assignment Group.

The following District reserve officers have been assigned as indicated: Lieut. Col. Horace G. Byers, U. S. Department of Agriculture, and Maj. Colin M. Mackall, both of the Chemical Warfare Reserves, to the First Chemical Regiment (Regular Army); First Lieut. Rolland C. Billister, Dental Reserve, of 3900 Reservoir road, to the 364th Medical Regiment; Second Lieut. Sidney B. Smith, Cavalry Reserve, of 3110 Adams Mill road, to the Sixty-second Cavalry Division.

Capt. Stirling Bockover, Medical Reserve, of Mount Alto Hospital, is relieved from assignment to the Forty-ninth Station Hospital and is assigned to the Twelfth Infantry, Regular Army.

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES

Maj. Gen. Anton Stephan, commanding general of the District of Columbia National Guard and the Twenty-ninth Division, now has under consideration field training camps for the summer of 1933. He has expressed the desire that all troops of the District of Columbia National Guard, with the exception of the 260th Coast Artillery, participate in the joint camp to be held at Camp Ritchie, Cascade, Md., immediately following the annual encampments of the Maryland National Guard. The exact place and dates of training for the 260th Coast Artillery have not been designated, but Gen. Stephan is of the opinion that this unit should utilize the modern equipment for antiaircraft firing which is available at Fort Monroe, Va. The training of the Twenty-ninth division staff, which is one of Gen. Stephan's primary functions, is being considered with a view to the possibility of having other Twenty-ninth Division Headquarters units present for a part of the training period.

An honorable discharge has been issued to Private Herbert S. Foster, Battery B, 260th Coast Artillery, that he may enlist in the United States Army.

Upon the recommendation of his company commander, Private (first class) Malcolm E. Wardwell, Company A, 121st Engineers, has been promoted to the grade of corporal.

The fall meeting of the Twenty-ninth Division staff will be held at Fredericksburg, Va., on Saturday, December 10. All members of the staff are expected to assemble promptly at 9 a. m. at the offices of the Battlefield Memorial Association, from which point Col. Wilbourn, secretary for the commission, is to conduct the party over the battlefield of Chancellorsville and, if time permits, cover the battles of Fredericksburg, the Wilderness and Spottsylvania in a general way.

THREE THANKSGIVING PARDONS FOR ARMY

In Addition $100,000 Will Be Expended for Dinners for Military Forces.

Following a 45-year-old Thanksgiving Day custom of releasing a limited number of military prisoners, whose conduct has been excellent and who have served material portions of their sentences, the War Department has selected three soldiers to be released this Thursday. Communications authorizing the release of the prisoners have been sent out to the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Alcatraz, Calif., where two men will be released, and to Governors Island, where one will be freed.

In addition, Uncle Sam will celebrate Thanksgiving for his 18,750 enlisted men and 12,000 officers by serving them a special turkey dinner. Approximately 200,000 pounds of turkeys have been purchased. The dinner check for this one item alone will read something like $100,000. To date approximately 20,000 birds have been selected and will soon be prepared for the feast, which will be served in China, the Philippines, Alaska, Panama, Hawaii and Puerto Rico. It is interesting to note that the personnel of the Philippine Scouts and the Puerto Rican native regiments have acquired a taste for the American bird and will get their share of it.

Contrasts With Valley Forge.

The 1932 Thanksgiving Day dinner to be served to the soldiers bears a sharp contrast to the meal served to Gen. George Washington's men at Valley Forge in 1777. The rations issued to the men in 1777 consisted of portions of fresh beef, flour, dried peas, rice, beer, fresh milk and a piece of soap. The total cost ran something over 11 cents.

And here is what the soldiers will eat:

Green Onions Queen Olives
Mixed Gherkins
Saltines Heart of Lettuce Radishes
Celery
ROAST YOUNG TURKEY
Chestnut dressing Giblet Gravy
Cranberry
Baked Sugar Cured Virginia Ham
Raisin Sauce
Candied Yams Stuffed Potatoes
Asparagus Tips on Toast with Drawn Butter
Waldorf Fruit Salad
Mayonnaise Dressing
Neapolitan Ice Cream Macaroons
Lady Fingers
Hot Mince Pie Mock Brandy Sauce
Pumpkin Pie

Cigars Coffee Cigarettes
Fruit Punch

Proclamation of Washington.

Gen. George Washington, first commander in chief of the American Army, issued his famous Thanksgiving proclamation to the Army at Valley Forge, Pa., on December 17, 1777, as follows:

"Tomorrow being the day set apart by the honorable Congress for public thanksgiving and praise, and duty calling us devoutly to express our grateful thanks to God for the manifold blessings he has granted us, the general directs that the Army remain in its present quarters, and that chaplains perform divine service with their several corps and brigades; and earnestly exhorts all officers and soldiers, whose absence is not indispensably necessary, to attend with reverence the solemnities of the day."

The above proclamation, following 156 years after the first celebration by the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth, marked the Army's celebration of the first universal Thanksgiving, December 18, 1777, which day, after the surrender of Burgoyne, was appointed by Congress as a day for the American people to thank God for "independence and peace."

Contracts in Navy Total $169,469

Capital Firm to Construct Road and Water Main in Quantico.

The Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department has awarded contracts totaling $169,469, according to a recent announcement. Brady Bros., of Washington, received a contract of $21,403 for a road and water main at the Marine Barracks at Quantico, Va.

The Otis Elevator Co. will build a freight elevator at the naval operating base at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. The contract price is $3,471.

Ingersoll-Rand Co. will install an air compressor at the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., for $16,660. All of the above concerns are local organizations.

INFANTRY DISPLAYS WEAPONS USED IN WARFARE

Infantry soldiers display each of the weapons employed in their branch of the service. The unit pictured above is putting a rifle, a bayonet, an automatic rifle, a 37 millimeter, or "one pound" gun, a pistol, a hand grenade, a light tank, an infantry mortar, a machine gun and a rifle grenade into action against a mythical enemy.

CHEMICAL SERVICE WANTS MORE MEN

Change of Name to "Chemical Corps" Recommended by Gen. Gilchrist.

"With the limited available personnel and their increased activities, due to the policy of training the National Guard Organized Reserves, R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C., it is becoming extremely difficult for this service to carry out its mission of training the entire Army in chemical warfare," says Maj. Gen. H. L. Gilchrist, chief of Chemical Warfare Service, in his annual report, released last week.

"The country at the present time has a definite military policy, in which the development and training of the National Guard Organized Reserves, the R. O. T. C. and the C. M. T. C. are specifically stressed. Every effort is being made by the Chemical Warfare Service to cooperate with industry, and it is most gratifying to state that the number of industrial organizations and institutions which have applied to the Chemical Warfare Service during the past year for advice and help has been greatly increased. As a rule, these requests are for technical advice and assistance pertaining to problems which can not be obtained elsewhere.

"This service must be able to keep abreast with all developments of science adaptable to chemical warfare, and it is of the greatest importance that the various branches of the military establishments be trained and instructed in these latest developments immediately upon adoption. If, therefore, the Chemical Warfare Service is expected to accomplish this mission, an increase in both commissioned and enlisted personnel should be provided."

Maj. Gen. Gilchrist offers the following recommendations for the improvement of the Chemical Warfare Service:

"That the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Chemical Warfare Service be increased.

"That the name 'Chemical Warfare Service' be changed to 'Chemical Corps.'

"That every effort be made by the different arms and services to fill their quotas at the various courses at the Chemical Warfare school.

"That the enlisted strength of the companies in foreign departments be increased at the earliest practicable time.

"That the allowance of chemical munitions for training of the National Guard be increased to equal that now prescribed for the Regular Army.

"That the National Guard be encouraged to send more students to the Chemical Warfare school.

"That the National Guard be encouraged to provide more gas masks for their troops.

"That immediate steps be taken to authorize a construction project to provide safe and adequate storage and administration facilities at the Edgewood Chemical Warfare depot.

"That construction of quarters for permanent and student officers at Edgewood Arsenal be authorized."

Message From Adams Urges Aid to Chests

The Secretary of the Navy has sent a message to all naval stations stating:

"The department desires that officers in command of units of shore establishments afford every practicable cooperation and assistance to local authorities concerned in raising funds for Community Chest or other local relief work in order that naval personnel and civil personnel of the naval establishment may be given suitable opportunity to contribute voluntarily to such relief in the communities in which they live."

CHAPELS FOR ARMY URGED BY CHAPLAIN

Absolutely Needed for Effective Religious Work, Says Yates in Report.

"Besides his church and pastoral duties, such as the conducting of religious services, the visitation of homes of married soldiers, his work in welfare cases, with boys and girls of his station, with cases of delinquency and perplexity, there are many other outstanding and important phases of a chaplain's activities," says the annual report of Chaplain J. E. Yates, chief of chaplains.

"Some chaplains are assigned to hospitals, giving their whole time to ministrations to the seriously sick and to others who are temporarily detained awaiting treatment or in various stages of convalescence. Three chaplains are detailed to transport duty, and the excellent work that these men accomplish is reflected in reports reaching this office from time to time from commanding officers of both transports and troops.

Many a Man Saved.

"A few chaplains are on full or part time duty at disciplinary barracks. At no place is a wise and sympathetic chaplain more needed or appreciated. Many a man has been saved for the service and for society by the kindly interest and counsel of a member of our corps.

"The chaplain is more and more expected to be an adviser in the matter of good literature. To that end he is often the librarian of the post."

A total of 16,395 services were conducted by regular chaplains last year, with an attendance of 1,559,604 persons.

Recommendations Made.

At the conclusion of his report Chaplain Yates outlines the following recommendations:

"Suitable places for religious worship on Army posts are absolutely necessary for the effectiveness of the chaplain's work. While chaplains are in complete accord with the priority given troop housing and hospitalization, they strongly believe that chapel construction should be given every possible consideration. The lack of adequate and suitable chapel facilities is a serious handicap, which at times becomes a large factor in the continued efficiency of chaplains. Although no new chapels have been erected, remodeling and improvements for several buildings have been accomplished during the year. Of these, improvements at Luke Field, T. H.; Schofield Barracks, T. H., and Fort William McKinley, P. I., are especially mentioned. One building housing chapel, library and motion-picture equipment was destroyed by fire."

CAPTAINS IN ARMY GIVEN NEW PLACES

Marquart Assigned to Duty in Capital; Adams' Letter Commends Seaman.

Orders have been issued to seven captains of the Navy for a change of duty. Capt. Edward J. Marquart, commanding the heavy cruiser U. S. S. Louisville, will be detached from that duty about December 17, and will be assigned to the office of Naval Operations of the Navy Department.

Capt. Bruce L. Canaga, U. S. N., professor of naval science and tactics at the R. O. T. C. unit, Berkeley, Calif., will succeed Capt. Marquart as commanding officer of the Louisville.

Capt. Robert Morris, U. S. N., commanding the U. S. S. Maryland, battleship, has been ordered to duty as a member of the Board of Inspection and Survey, Pacific Coast Section, San Francisco.

Capt. Lewis B. Porterfield, U. S. N., commanding the receiving ship at San Francisco, will relieve Capt. Morris of command of the Maryland.

For Receiving Ship.

Capt. Fred H. Poteet, U. S. N., commanding the U. S. S. Cincinnati, light cruiser, will succeed Capt. Porterfield as commanding officer of the receiving ship.

Capt. Byron McCandless, U. S. N., commanding the U. S. S. Raleigh, light cruiser, will be detached from that duty about December 17 and has been appointed officer in charge of the branch hydrographic office, Boston, Mass.

Capt. Ross S. Culp, U. S. N., Pacific Coast communication officer of the Twelfth Naval District, San Francisco, will relieve Capt. McCandless of command of the Raleigh.

Col. William B. Ladue, corps area engineer at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., and former Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia (1927-1930) has been ordered to his home to await retirement, effective November 30. Col. Ladue is a native of Adrian, Mich., born November 26, 1868. He entered West Point from Salem, Oreg., June 17, 1890, being commissioned second lieutenant of Engineers in 1894. Col. Ladue has served continuously in the Engineers and has had many important assignments.

Commendation for Seaman.

The Secretary of the Navy has sent a letter of commendation to Lester Osborne, seaman first class, United States Navy, attached to the U. S. S. Argonne, submarine tender, and recommended him to the Secretary of the Treasury for the award of a silver life-saving medal for rescuing an enlisted man of the Marine corps from drowning on July 29, 1932.

Lewis Cochran Cassidy, of 4336 River road northwest, has been promoted to the rank of captain in the Infantry Reserve.

Gustave John Fehrman, of 1006 Twenty-second street northwest, has been promoted to captain in the Quartermaster Reserve.

Harry Earl Rucker, of 1512 S street northeast, also has been promoted to the grade of captain in the Quartermaster Reserve.

Navy Cross for Corporal Gray.

Secretary of the Navy Adams in the name of the President has awarded the Navy Cross to Coroporal Karl T. Gray, U. S. M. C., for "distinguished service" during a large bandit concentration and attack on the Neptune Mines in Eastern Nicaragua in May, 1932.

FUQUA DESCRIBES FOREIGN INFANTRY

Motorization, Mechanization Main Developments Abroad, He Finds.

"Outstanding developments in the infantry of foreign armies during the past year have been in motorization and mechanization, the reorganization of the Infantry division to meet the requirements of increased mobility, the tactical principles to be employed by tank units in combat and methods and means of defense against hostile tank attacks," says Maj. Gen. Stephan O. Fuqua, the chief of Infantry, in his annual report.

Maj. Gen. Fuqua.

"Methods and means of this office in respect to obtaining and digesting information of the Infantry of foreign armies have continued as in previous years. Infantry defense against attacks from low-flying aircraft is being given closer attention and study than in past years, but this subject apparently has not progressed as far as it has in our Army.

"Two important changes in the agencies of the office occurred during the past fiscal year. The Tank School and Tank Board were transferred from Fort George G. Meade, Md., to Fort Benning, Ga., and incorporated in the Infantry School and Infantry Board, respectively. The Tank Board was moved on September 1, 1931, and the Tank School on June 11, 1932.

Selection of Officers.

"The present method of selection of officers to be recommended for vacancies occurring on foreign service, in all grades, has proved to be very satisfactory. The establishment of the normal tour of two years for all foreign service details appears to be producing a favorable reaction from Infantry officers in their assignments to foreign service garrisons which were of three years' duration.

"Under the present policy of this office governing selections, both as to qualification and numbers of Infantry officers to the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., the annual increment of second lieutenants can be taken care of as soon as they become eligible for the company officers' course.

"Insofar as training is concerned, the preparation of the Infantry for field service is generally satisfactory.

"The high standard of individual proficiency in marksmanship for the various Infantry weapons attained last year was maintained for all weapons, and in some cases increased. During the past few years efforts to have every available soldier complete a qualification course in the weapon with which he is armed have met with very noticeable results. This is evidenced by the fact that more than 90 per cent of the number on the rolls required or authorized to complete a marksmanship course actually completed the course.

Arm of Close Combat.

"Infantry is essentially the arm of close combat. This function, rather than the nature of its armament, distinguishes the Infantry as a combatant arm. The armament of the Infantry is adapted to the execution of its mission as the arm of close combat. The morale of the Infantry is subjected to a greater strain than that of any other arm through the heavy burden it bears in combat and on the march.

"Infantry has two general means of combat, fire and movement. Infantry fights by combining these two means of action. The moral material superiority attained through superiority of fire is confirmed in the assault. The mobility of the Infantry adapts it to movements on all characters of terrain.

"Organization is a constant study. Infantry organization is a study incorporating the systematic relationship of Infantry components to Infantry in general and Infantry to other arms and services. All organizations must be tempered by the character of weapons and other equipment, missions, War Department policies, historical traditions, national characteristics and geographical peculiarities. Other than a basic organization incorporating the elements common to second organization, there is no panacea."

Army Officers Are Promoted.

Maj. Ogg, Dental Corps, Is Made Lieutenant Colonel.

The promotion of Maj. Lester C. Ogg, Dental Corps, to the grade of lieutenant colonel with rank from November 12, 1932, is announced.

Capt. Arthur O. Walsh, finance department, has been relieved from duty in office of the chief of finance here and has been assigned to duty at Vancouver Barricks, Wash.

The promotion of each of the following officers to the grade indicated before their names is announced: Finance department, Col. Matt C. Bristol; Corps of Engineers, First Lieut. Donald C. Hawkins; Coast Artillery Corps, Lieut. Col. Hugh E. Pitts (assigned to duty with G. M. C.), Maj. Aaron Bradshaw, jr., Capt. Sherman E. Willard; Dental Corps, Lieut. Col. Herman S. Rush.

Take-Offs and Landings

By HARRIS B. HULL

LIEUT. THOMAS M. LOWE, of the chief of the Air Corps office down in the Munitions Building, tells us an interesting item about a young man who is really interested in aviation and has proved it.

His name is Joseph B. Donnelly and he learned to fly at Brooks and Kelley fields, graduating as a second lieutenant in the Reserves in 1930. Placed on active duty, he served with the third attack group at Fort Crockett and was subsequently placed on duty with the Eighth Attack Squadron.

In this latter assignment he was named assistant operations officer for the unit. His first sergeant and assistant was one Patrick Hayes. They worked well as a team. Then Donnelly's Reserve commission expired. But he liked the military end of aviation so much that he enlisted as a private and was assigned to the First Observation Squadron at Mitchel Field and Sergt. Patrick Hayes is now his boss. Isn't it nice that they were friends before

J. S. ..LLARD, vice president of Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation, announces that the export sales of airplanes and engines is better today than it has been in the history of the company. Mr. Allard states that recently 17 carloads of airplanes were shipped to South America and Europe, and that orders being received were most encouraging. More than 20 airplanes were sold for export last week. R. S. Damon, president of Curtiss-Wright Airplane Co., of St. Louis, employed 90 additional men in order to speed up production of planes for export.

The "Osprey" a newly designed military airplane, powered by a Wright Whirlwind 420-horsepower engine, has resulted in many orders from South America. Mr. Allard also stated that T. P. Wright, vice president and general manager of Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Co., at Buffalo, had hired 125 additional employes in order to speed up production on Curtiss Hawk Pursuit planes for export. Twenty-four Curtiss Hawks were shipped to Turkey last week, being the first American-built military planes to be shipped to that country. Earlier in the year Turkey purchased six Curtiss Fledgling training planes. This week two Curtiss Kingbird transport planes, powered by two Wright Whirlwind 300-horsepower engines, are being shipped to Turkey to be placed on the first airline to be operated by Turkey.

These export orders are very encouraging as many foreign countries are purchasing American planes for the first time. This establishment of American aviation in foreign markets will undoubtedly place the aviation industry of this country in a very good position for future business.

Mr. Allard further stated that orders amounting to more than $500,000 had been received from transport lines for eleven of the new fifteen passenger transport planes now being built by Curtiss-Wright Airplane Co. at St. Louis. These planes will be powered by two of the new 700 horsepower Wright Cyclone engines similar to the engine placed in Maj. James Doolittle's monoplane last week.

Another order was received by Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation for Curtiss Conqueror engines from the Scadta Air Lines of South America, which will be placed in Dornier Wahl Flying Boats. This is the first time this company has purchased American equipment for their operations.

NAVAL RESERVE NOTES

By ENSIGN JACK STAHL, U. S. N. R.

After a trip down the Potomac with the crew of the naval reserve boat the value of the training given the men is quickly realized. On the last trip down, the motor launch, which was under the command of Lieut. John B. Cleland, jr., U. S. N. R., "shoved off" from the Navy Yard at 8:30 Saturday morning and returned late Sunday evening. During a period of time such as this an officer is able to become familiar with the qualifications of his men and each member of the crew is able to receive personal instruction in some phase of naval activity.

On the 70-mile cruise down the river last week each man took a turn at the wheel of the boat, and each man stood a watch in the engine room. Elemental instructions in navigation were given and, through actual contact, the men were familiarized with various naval terms and practices, and in this way much of the nomenclature of a ship is readily picked up.

Shortly before docking at Cobb Island the rudder of the boat was badly damaged. This necessitated a repair job with a very limited amount of tools available. It was necessary for the men to get down into the icy water, remove the rudder, carry it ashore, straighten the heavy metal braces, rebolt them and return the mended rudder to the ship. All this requires considerable ingenuity on the part of the men and the many incidents of this sort which came up from time to time gave them a very good understanding of navy work.

Myron H. Avery, of the Volunteer Reserve, U. S. N. R., has been promoted from the rank of lieutenant (Junior Grade) to lieutenant. Lieut. Avery is the legal officer of the battalion.

It is with regret that announcement of the death of Robert W. Hanneman, fireman, third class, is made. Hanneman, who was a member of the Second Division, was killed early Saturday morning in an automobile accident. He was buried with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery. Friends in the battalion participated in the ceremony.

Three Capital Officers On U. S. S. Indianapolis

Three of the officers of the heavy cruiser Indianapolis, placed in commission last week at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, are Washingtonians.

Commander Paul H. Bastedo, U. S. N., executive officer of the ship, resides at 3055 W street northwest. Formerly assistant director of naval communications, Commander Bastedo holds the Distinguished Service Medal for service during the World War.

We are our BROTHERS' KEEPERS

Says HENDRIK VAN LOON

By Hannah Stein

THE Fortunate Must Help Those Less Fortunate to Find Their Niche in the World and This Can Best Be Done by Co-ordinating Education, Says Noted Historian

A DYNAMIC force shot the lid off the kettle when Hendrik Willem Van Loon, in shirt sleeves minus a collar, and a circumference even somewhat greater than when he sailed for his beloved Amsterdam a few months ago, made the emphatic assertion that "we, all of us," making a gesture with his great arms to encompass all that he surveyed, "are equally responsible for the happiness and the well-being of the world in which we happen to live."

"We are all of us fellow passengers on the same planet," said the historian and biographer, whose "Van Loon's Geography" is a creation of his individual point of view. "All of us want to be happy, and the responsibility should be shared equally."

Then he paused to mop beads of perspiration from his large and capable nose. He had been juggling mentally with handkerchiefs, soup plates, saucers and spoons to make mountains, gulf streams, oceans and plateaus, to illustrate that their purpose in existing was entirely for our benefit.

"BUT what can we do to have that happiness?" I asked him. "Where does it take root?"

"Its root is in the home," he said. "The influence toward good or evil in our lives has its source in the home, and the influence we get outside is only contributory."

"But many people say that the home is slipping, that it is built on flimsy fabric and that it has ceased to be the pivot around which our lives revolve. They aver that women's quest for careers and other outside activities have taken them away from the fireside and destroyed the feeling of permanence and security," I said, for the sake of securing a further enlightening from Mr. Van Loon.

"No one need worry about the home disappearing," he said. "At least, not for a million years to come. One might as well say that nests are disappearing. No nests, no birds; no homes, no human beings.

"I often think about it and feel that the hope of the home lies in education. That is, that to help the situation both of the 'crowded out' homeless in large cities and to preserve homes in the suburbs and villages where one still finds plenty of room for everything and for children, one must take education seriously.

"In a sense, both classes are having some internal trouble. This modern spirit, which has made the child an individual rather than an adjunct of 'Dear Papa' and 'Dear Mamma,' is very disturbing in many families.

"When I was young, the relationship between parents and their children was much simpler. But it was a hopelessly one-sided affair—Papa and Mamma were there to be loved, honored and obeyed. That was a ritual. And even when the loving and the honoring were not so easy, we never were allowed to overlook the 'obeying.'

"All this has changed. The 'obeying' has gone the way of so many other ancestral institutions, and in years to come, the word itself may become obsolete. Even marriage vows gradually are eliminating it. But on the other hand, there has been an increase in 'loving' and 'honoring.' And I attribute this to the fact that there is more understanding between parents and their children than ever before.

"It no longer is enough for Papa to say to little Johnnie: 'Now, my boy, the world is round and you must believe it is because I say it is.' Little Johnnie will not accept it, if you please. He wants something to think about, and Papa's statement is too easy. So he will go on making an independent investigation and inquiry, and saying to this one and to that one: 'But why is it round?'

"Of course, this makes it a little more difficult for Papa, and maybe a little less pleasant for the Papa in the old-fashioned home.

"In my opinion, it is better to have it so. There is nothing more terrible than the so-called house-tyrant of my youth who included his wife in his lofty contempt for everything that did not wear trousers. I remember how he used to go through the house like a bullet of arrogance and self-righteousness, laying down the law upon every conceivable subject, because he was man, and the ordained head of the household.

"Those were the days of the patriarchal system. The husband and father reigned supreme. He was the head and the proverbial provider, though his wife might have taken in washing to keep the family from starving.

"Now there is a reaction. Children no longer respect the traditions which for thousands of years told them to respect their dear parents. Instead of being polite and submissive these days, they look at us with questioning eyes when we lay down the law to them, and say: 'Oh, yeah? Is that so?' And they go on doing exactly as they please."

Speaking rather feelingly on the eighth floor of his apartment overlooking Washington Square Park, he stopped for a breath of air and to look down at a few hopeless mothers who were spanking their children for annoying them.

Hendrik Van Loon has never really been perfectly happy in New York. He prefers the quiet of Veere, Holland, where he was born in 1882, and where he spent his boyhood. It was at Veere that he became accustomed to sleeping without hearing even the purr of a mosquito. But it was in America that he got acquainted with sunshine and strawberries. He came to the United States to study at Cornell University, then at Harvard, and later he went to Munich for his doctorate.

One is tremendously impressed by this large, corpulent person with a fund of good humor. Even an annoying telephone which called him away several times did not shake his equilibrium. The sight of a blue sailboat with a large white mast apparently gave him fresh inspiration, and he continued conversation.

"It is true that youth, in his newly discovered power of independence, sometimes goes too far and becomes smart-alecky," he said. "I am afraid that from reading the tabloids too early, they receive early training in the idea that smart-alecky answers, if repeated glibly enough, will cover up any amount of ignorance and lack of true intelligence. But the pendulum, as Mr. Macaulay told us a long time ago, swings backward as far, or almost as far, as it has swung forward and vice versa, and very soon the youngsters of this day and age will repent of their ways and become normal again in their relationship to their parents.

"You ask me now: 'What can the parents do about it?' And I shall answer you * * * what every teacher does. A wise teacher knows that there is only one way to teach somebody something he or she ought to know, and that is, by exposing that somebody to learning and not by trying to hammer it into his brain. You can take a child to the fountain of learning, but you cannot make it drink unless it wants to. Of course, if you are bigger and stronger, you can hold its head underneath the pump until he drinks from fear or otherwise chokes. But like a dog or a horse or any other normal animal, he will retain the mental ballast thus acquired only just as long as you are looking. But the moment your back is turned. * * * Well, if you want precious information on the subject, try to make your dog or your cat eat something the critter does not want and see what happens.

"ONE of the great fallacies of our time is the belief in the equality of all men. This is a remnant of the nonsense of Jean Jacques Rousseau forced upon the world during the latter half of the eighteenth century. And our own ancestors, being devoted worshipers of this doctrine, proclaimed to all the world that since all men were created equal they should have equal rights.

"That is the wrong approach. All people should be given the same chance. But if they are incapable or unwilling to absorb the education that is given to them, they should not be forced to swallow it.

"This fact is recognized in many of our modern schools where children no longer are treated as if they were sheep, but are speedily sorted according to their natural abilities and their personal preferences. Certain things any child not absolutely an idiot can learn. Reading and writing and a small modicum of mathematics are absolutely essential in our age of speed and precision. But whether a child should be forced to go beyond that depends upon the way he is born.

"But the school dealing rather roughly with humanity en masse is bound to do some pretty crude things. Just as in the army when you had to feed 15,000 men in an hour's time. You could not go in for frills and the nicer varieties of serving doilies and fingerbowls. In just that way must the school ladle out its information in its haphazard and happy-go-lucky fashion."

At this point he diverted to make a few pen and ink strokes on a sketch that was lying in front of him. This great author draws and paints as well as he writes. His "R. V. R." (The Life of Rembrandt von Rijn) and "Van Loon's Geography" are illustrated with sketches by himself. And like his writing, his art has a human touch, the delicate touch of humor and wit.

"There was a time when parents, because their children showed possible signs of talent, spent a great deal of money trying to convert them into geniuses, but I see an improvement now. Parents are beginning to look at hard facts, and this will mean greater happiness for them and their children, because there will be no disappointments.

"THE old home, however, of which I talked a few minutes ago, is rapidly going, and perhaps it is just as well. A new home of mutual understanding and forebearance is succeeding the old home of Papa's grand eloquence when he used to assert himself and say 'It is so because I told you so.' And the old home of the dear but foolish Mamma who felt that her own darlings were entitled to everything in this world simply because they were hers.

"In revaluating many old values, one of the great revaluations will come when we begin to understand that the home is not something apart from school and from education, but it is part of it. The home is the place where the detailed work can be done which must complement the wholesale methods of school.

"It is the job of the home to discover for what their children are best fit. Parents must find out from personal observation the child's natural talents and preferences. If Johnnie shows his parents that he has a preference for carpentering and he registers no enthusiasm for engineering, they can give the school the lead to make Johnnie a carpenter. And if Mary proves by all symptoms that she prefers housewifery to anything else, that she loves cooking and other domestic chores, then why in the name of common sense start her on a course in French literature of which she never will understand a word? Her ambition bids her to make a perfect pudding, then why force her to write or to draw?"

Then this great author sat back and made this summary:

"We all probably agree on this, that the world at large is not as happy as it might be and is often supposed to be. We try to keep up a brave front. But everywhere the old order of things is crackling and everywhere there are signs that one form of civilization is rapidly coming to an end."

But he said that the panacea lies in the correlation of education and home.

YOUNG MEN WANT—

Then Come Adventure, Romance and Love for the Great Outdoors for the Real Red-Blooded Youth, Declares Robert Montgomery, Who Would Like to Be a Roving Journalist

By Alice L. Tildesley

IF ROBERT MONTGOMERY could have his heart's desire, he thinks he knows what that would be.

"I should like to have a roving commission from some big news service that would permit me to go wherever I pleased," he told me, the mention of his idea lighting eager lamps in his eyes that look more gray than blue.

"That is the most fascinating way of earning a living that I can imagine. I'd like to go to Russia to see how the Five-Year Plan is progressing; then perhaps down to Brazil to watch a revolution; or if Brazil's battle is all over by that time, then to wherever there is a struggle that sounds interesting; to a big peace conference; to the South Pole with an explorer; to Washington to see the inside of politics; anywhere that big things are being done or new things tried.

"My first ambition, you know, was to be a writer.

"Maybe I'd get so thrilled over what was going on that I'd forget to write about it, but that would be life!

"When the news correspondents who covered the Olympic Games were out here, they were often at the studio and I got to know some of them pretty well. One of them complained to me one day that the chief difficulty was to find real human-interest yarns.

"'Maybe I wouldn't recognize a human-interest story if it met me on the front steps, but I'll look around and let you know if I see one,' I promised.

"By great good luck, I met an old man, a Finn named Janevin. He had attended the Olympics back in 1904 for the first time and had been so vitally impressed by them that he swore he would go home, get married and raise Olympic champions. This year he was here with four sons, all named for Greek heroes—one was Achilles, I remember—each son winning a place in the sports.

"The story went all over the country and I have a letter from the head of the news service saying that I can have a job with them whenever I get ready.

"Idealism is coming in. Men are turning to religion. Times are hard and people are suffering, so they go to church to pray for help to carry them through," says Robert Montgomery

Robert Montgomery is a great lover of outdoors and is here shown with Constance Bennett during a ride on horseback while on location

Perhaps he thought that was a joke, but I'm saving the letter, and one of these days when pictures get through with me—which may be any day, who knows?—I may appear at his desk and claim the job.

"What one young man wants out of life is pretty much the same thing as what all modern young men want, though, take it all in all.

"First. Success in his business or profession.

"Second. Economic independence.

"Third. Recognition for his work.

"Besides these three things, of course, all normal young people look for romance, adventure and some satisfying form of relaxation.

"Isn't that the tale of it?"

He sat in his studio dressing room, clad in the shabby outfit of a poor truck driver, his current film role, and illustrated his points by waving a chicken sandwich.

"Every one is anxious to succeed. We all hate to fail at anything we try to do. If we are manufacturing cars, keeping books or designing houses, we like to be looked on as very good in our line.

"All of us want economic independence. A few years ago, we looked on money as the thing that would do anything, but today money is scarce and hard to get. We'd like to be independent, but we've discovered that money isn't all we thought it was.

"Idealism is coming in. Men are turning to religion. Times are hard and people are suffering, so they go to church to pray for help to carry them through. And perhaps those who go there to get material aid remain because they find something they had forgotten—which is God.

"WE ALL hope for recognition for our efforts. A clerk who has the humblest job in the office enjoys being able to suggest some time-saving scheme and then being rewarded with a rise, or even with commendation, for his idea.

"A banker likes to be asked to make a speech at a banquet or a meeting when the request means that he is important to his world.

"A scientist likes to be asked to write a paper on his discovery, when doing so is considered an honor.

"An actor is not different from other men. He wants the same things from life. An actor is a human being, but nobody can be persuaded to believe it.

"I dress as other men of my means dress; I eat approximately the same food; I occupy myself outside of the studio in a similar fashion. My attitude toward my work is that of any other man toward his work.

"I like to have my work noticed, but personally I wish to be inconspicuous. Acting is a job like any other. The thing is to do it as well as you know how.

"Adventure is important to youth.

"Some men can get adventure out of matching wits with their competitors in business. Some get it from working out original ideas in the arts, creating something, beautiful or fantastic, or merely novel. Some get it from actual action—exploring, stunting, entering competitions, racing and so on.

"I like action. I signed on as a deckhand on a Standard Oil tanker once and went from New York, through the Panama Canal, to San Pedro and back, to see what life is like from a tanker. I found out.

"Most young men are interested in sports. They may get over it later, but they usually like some form of sports when they are of voting age.

"I like tennis and golf and horseback riding, but best of all polo. Ordinarily I play polo three times a week, but I haven't been on a horse now for four months. First I had to work, and then I was operated on, and now the doctor has made me swear not to mount even a rocking-horse until next Wednesday.

"You see this?" He swung an object toward me. It appeared to be a short club, heavy at one end, the other having a canvas strap handle. "It's a weighted polo stick, cut short. I carry it to keep my arm in condition while I can't play.

"SOME men can get up in the morning and bend ten times this way and ten times that, throw their arms ten times to the front and ten times to each side, and think that is exercise, and they have done their bit for the day. But that wouldn't mean a thing to me. I take my exercise in my sports.

"I love a competitive sport where skill counts. Polo calls for that. Tennis is excellent for swift action, golf gives you grand exercise, you need a quick eye and strong wrist, but polo is mental stimulation as well as physical exercise. Polo is adventure. It means teamwork, which is always fun. If you don't do what is expected of you, you throw out three other fellows. If some one else doesn't do it, or fails in trying, it is up to you to think double-quick and act like lightning, to save the occasion.

"Polo is expensive in the East, but inexpensive out here, and it's the finest sport I know.

"American men go into sports with all their hearts. It's important to them to win. Englishmen seem to take sport more seriously, somehow. They stick to the rules and play for all they are worth, but winning is not so important.

"Perhaps it is because most of us enjoy surmounting difficulties that we can become so thrilled over sports.

"I'm not keen on watching other people do things. I like to do them myself. I think I'd enjoy driving a racing car, if I had the chance. It looks interesting.

"I suppose one reason we go in for games and so on is that participation in them takes us out of ourselves. The best relaxation is said to be a complete change of occupation, and activity is a change from the confining occupations most of us must follow.

"BUT if sports fail to interest the modern man, he can find an outlet in books, especially since amusements that cost money have become unavailable. Libraries are experiencing a great boom these days and we are beginning to discover that there is great joy between the covers of books.

"I believe library statistics report a decided increase in the reading of serious books, biographies, scientific works and the like. I think that means something more than the fact that there are many unemployed. I fully expect a wave of estheticism next and the rise of new interest in art and music.

"A few years ago, no young man could admit that he liked music because people immediately thought him effeminate. Today an appreciation of music is expected of educated people.

"Perhaps when prosperity returns, all these things will fade and die—we'll forget the spiritual and rush back to the material once more. Life seems to be like that.

"Oh, yes, I mentioned romance as another thing desired by normal youth.

"The average boy thinks of love and marriage as inevitable. Sometimes he simply accepts it as a natural phenomenon that happens to nearly everybody, and so will very likely happen to him some day.

"Sometimes he thinks of a romance that leads to the altar as a glorified happy ending—a great moment that will change his whole life.

"When the words that bind him to the girl he is marrying are pronounced over him, he expects that he will feel suddenly different. A great responsibility will fall upon him and he will be seriously striving toward a great, if vague, goal forever after. Or perhaps a weight will roll away, there will be no more temptation, no more loneliness or unhappiness, only exaltation and continuing bliss.

"Of course, it won't work out like that. No human being is capable of sustained emotion. Two persons won't be miraculously altered because they have married one another. They will continue to be two persons, not one. And a very good thing, too.

"But the boy who expects a miracle—or the girl, for that matter—is bewildered.

"It is as if a small child, who has been studying a map of Germany and France in his geography, notes that France is green and Germany is pink. He is taken traveling and finds that, true enough, France is green, according to specifications.

"But when he is taken on to Germany, his mother, sitting beside him in the car, says: 'Look out now, Jimmy. You're in Germany!' And Jimmy plasters his nose against the windowpane and wails: 'This can't be Germany, mother, because it isn't pink!'

"But make what he will of it when it arrives, young men do normally look for marriage and expect it to be happy.

"It is human to think that you'd like your son to go to your old school, or play on your pet team, or belong to your favorite club."

AN EFFICIENT-LOOKING gentleman put his head in at the dressing-room door to remark that they were ready for Bob on the set, and we strolled down to the sound stage together.

"I love the country," observed Bob, swinging his polo stick. "I have a 180-acre farm about two and a half hours away from New York. We lived on it only a week when we found we had to come out here, but some day we plan to go back there and settle down.

"About forty acres could be cultivated and we could raise crops on that, keep chickens and cows and horses and dogs, and let the rest of the land remain wild. It would be a marvelous place.

"I like solitude. Sometimes I realize that I'm feeling rotten and wonder why and then I remember that it's two weeks since I've been alone! I need some time all to myself, just to walk or ride or read or think or—just set, as the old man said.

"I suppose that's one reason that I often sit in the middle of a gay party and hear absolutely nothing anybody says. Defense mechanism I set up because I can't be really alone."

THANKSGIVING--

THE arrival of a second boatload of Pilgrims in 1621 was the occasion of one week's rejoicing. A friendly contest of arms was staged with the Indians as part of the festivities, here pictured by the famous illustrator, C. S. Reinhart.

this Great American Holiday

Custom Alone Has Set Apart One Day for Thanks to the Divine Ruler—It Is Not a National Legal Holiday, but Is Universally Observed by Reasons of Proclamations by State Governors Following That Issued by the President

By Francine Markel

A moment of prayer in a Puritan household, from the drawing by J. W. Ehninger which appeared in Harper's Weekly in 1867

The spirit of Thanksgiving prevails among the poor and needy of New York who are being cared for by the various charitable organizations of the big city

THANKSGIVING Day is the only religious festival celebrated in the United States by authority of the civil Government. Yet there is no law whatever requiring a President to proclaim it. Indeed, if Mr. Hoover had so chosen he might have omitted his Thanksgiving proclamation altogether, in which event we should not have had this Federal legal holiday; for Thanksgiving becomes such only in the year when the President so designates it, and even then it is a Federal legal holiday only in the District of Columbia, Alaska and our insular possessions.

Whenever Thanksgiving Day has been an annual legal holiday it has become such by virtue of statutes passed by the separate States, and it is to their credit that all States have done so except Utah, where, however, the festival is regularly observed without statutory specification. The Governors of all States now wait for the President to proclaim the date. Then they issue their own individual proclamations, as do many of the local Mayors.

MANY people now living remember the time when Thanksgiving Day was observed in only a few places outside of Massachusetts.

The Continental Congress and early Presidents had proclaimed special thanksgiving days after certain important occasions, and some of these celebrations occurred in spring or summer. Sometimes two days of national thanksgiving fell within the same year. Then the practice came to a halt and there were no such national festivals for many years.

Religious organizations, admiring the spirit with which the celebration had been yearly observed in New England, then got the habit of petitioning Presidents to proclaim it as a yearly national holiday, but some of the early ones thus prodded were afraid of becoming involved in some Church and State complication; so they dodged the issue or refused outright to comply.

And on the other hand, Governors in certain States, when proposing to establish Thanksgiving as a yearly festival, met with rebuff from citizens. Abraham Lincoln was the first President to approve of the idea and his successors have all emulated his example, although some of them have left to subordinates the detail of drafting their proclamations.

Mr. Hoover, however, has insisted on composing his own Thanksgiving proclamations, word for word. In somewhat earlier times the Department of State usually saved thanks-giving Chief Executives this trouble.

The present process is much simpler than it was then. One of the White House stenographers types the proclamation and it concludes with the usual formula: "In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed." The date of signature is stated in both the "year of our Lord" and the year "of the independence of the United States of America"—now the 157th. Beneath this ceremonious conclusion and dating, the President signs his name and the proclamation is sent across the street to be attested by the Secretary of State.

THE Thanksgiving proclamation, thus duly signed and sealed, is filed in the archives of that department. Typewritten copies are then supplied to the correspondents accredited to the White House, who wire it to their newspapers; and another typewritten copy is sent to the Government Printing Office, which distributes printed copies to our embassies and legations abroad.

It used to be the procedure to mail copies to Governors of States and Mayors, but these officials have of late years read the Presidents' proclamations in the newspapers and have issued their own proclamations, fixing the same date for Thanksgiving as appointed by the President—now always the last Thursday in November.

For about a generation, Presidents' Thanksgiving proclamations were usually drafted by an interesting genius who had an especial talent for composing State documents. This was Alvey Augustus Adee, who entered the United States diplomatic service in 1870 and who was an Assistant Secretary of State from 1886 until his death in 1924.

DURING those thirty-eight years Mr. Adee composed nearly all of the Thanksgiving proclamations, and he turned them out in the form of little classics whose diction almost rivaled that of the Episcopal liturgy itself. Of course, all Presidents within that time had the privilege of editing Mr. Adee's drafts of these proclamations, and in a few instances a President, while keenly alive to the novelty of his high authority, preferred to compose this important instrument, but these instances were unusual and scattering.

Which of the exceptional proclamations of those days was composed by minds other than that of Mr. Adee is one of the state secrets which our State Department keeps under seal.

Glancing through the old Thanksgiving proclamations preserved in the State Department archives, it is interesting to note how the vital and epoch-making events of our history have been therein treated.

"This Thanksgiving finds the people still bowed with sorrow for the death of a great and good President," states the first Roosevelt proclamation, written during the autumn immediately following President McKinley's assassination, and which is said to have been personally written by the martyred President's successor.

President Johnson's first proclamation, after the surrender of Lee, states that "it has pleased Almighty God, during the year which is now coming to an end, to relieve our country from the fearful scourge of civil war."

The Thanksgiving proclamations of President Lincoln are filled with pathos. In 1862 he asked the people to "implore spiritual consolation in behalf of all who have been brought into affliction by casualties and calamities of war," and in 1863 to invoke divine influence "to subdue the anger which has produced and so long sustained a needless and cruel rebellion."

At the close of the War of 1812 President Madison asked his people to give thanks "for the blessings of peace," as well as the resources which have enabled them to assert their national rights and to enhance their national character in another arduous conflict, which is now happily terminated."

After the adoption of the Constitution, Washington invoked thanks "for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one lately instituted." He also asked the people to pray for the protection and guidance of "all sovereigns and nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us)."

THE Nation's first official thanksgivers were committees, usually of three, appointed by the Continental Congress—in the days before the United States had a President—to draw up each year a proclamation recommending to the Governors of the States that a designated date be observed as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer. These committees appear to have been members of Congress, except in 1778, when the two chaplains of Congress were ordered to prepare the draft.

From Madison's time to Lincoln's was the period when no national Thanksgiving Days were designated by our Presidents. Andrew Jackson and Zachary Taylor refused to issue the necessary proclamations. Jackson had been requested to do so by the General Synod of the Reformed Church and in declining stated that he "could not do otherwise without transcending the limits prescribed by the Constitution for the President."

Taylor, declining a request from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, said that he "thought it most proper to leave the subject in the hands of the Governors of the several States."

But, as stated, some of the Governors had difficulty in putting over the Thanksgiving Day idea. On becoming Governor of New York, John Jay endeavored to establish such a holiday in that State as an annual institution, but his political enemies branded his proclamation as an attempt to stir up religious prejudice in his favor, and he made no further attempts. His successor, Governor Clinton, however, renewed Jay's efforts and was successful, but New York's Thanksgiving did not coincide with New England's, which, until the middle of the last century, occurred a week later than that of the Empire State.

SEARCHING old newspaper files to learn how Thanksgiving was celebrated in those times, I found the other day a statement that in 1858 10,000 persons, after eating one Thanksgiving Day dinner in New York City, had gone to their early homes in New England to enjoy another, a week later.

Thanksgiving soon became an annual, though local, institution in most of the Western States, which had been settled largely by New Yorkers and New Englanders, but the South was somewhat later in adopting the idea.

Until 1838 the Governors of Illinois, settled largely by Kentuckians, refused to issue any proclamations designating a day of thanksgiving because they regarded such a festival as a "Yankee holiday."

The South never celebrated Thanksgiving Day until a curious controversy arose in Virginia in 1855. Governor Johns, in a letter to the Legislature, urged that the day be adopted, but the Legislature did not look with favor upon the proposition, and the Governor accordingly did not issue the proclamation.

Public interest in the matter had been aroused by this time throughout not only the State of Virginia but most of the other Southern States as well. A lively debate was carried on, largely in the newspapers, as to the merits of the holiday. The affirmative side seemed to have the better of the argument, and in 1857 Governor Wise, of Virginia, issued a Thanksgiving Day proclamation, for which he was fiercely denounced by many of the influential Southern newspapers, which declared Thanksgiving to be "a relic of Puritanic bigotry."

In New England, where it had been an institution, proclaimed by Governor Bradford in 1621, Thanksgiving Day continued all the while to outrank even Christmas as a festival of joy, feasting and family reunion.

Most historians speak of Governor Bradford's Thanksgiving as the first held by white people in America, but there was one such festival held previous to that. It was conducted on the shores of Newfoundland in 1578 by an English clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Wolfall, who had accompanied the Frobisher expedition which brought the first English colony to settle on those shores.

The earliest record of any observance of a Thanksgiving in the present territory of the United States was held by the Popham Colony at Sagadaboc, on the coast of Maine, in 1607. These were religious ceremonies only.

First American Thanksgiving

THE first Thanksgiving service held on American shores was not that ordered by Governor Bradford. Such a festival was held on the shores of Newfoundland in 1578 and was conducted by a Rev. Mr. Wolfall, who accompanied the first English colony to settle on the western continent.

The earliest record of any observance of a Thanksgiving in the present territory of the United States was held by the Popham Colony at Sagadaboc, on the coast of Maine, in 1607. These were religious ceremonies only.

The Return of Romance

THERE are all sorts of portents on the horizon which lead me to believe that the age of sophistication is drawing to a close and the era of romance dawning. People want to be spontaneous, enthusiastic, natural and happy again. Ever since the war men and women have assumed a shallow veneer—an attitude that did not permit them to be surprised over anything. When a human being can no longer be surprised at an exquisite dawn, at a picturesque new country or an unusual personality he encounters, he is only half alive. All the fun of life has departed from him.

A man with illusions is a happy man, and he can also be a worldly man, but without the pose of sophisticated worldliness.

The Age of Cynicism, Wise-cracking and Sophistication Is Passing and Men and Women Are Reaching Out to Restore the Lost Illusions of Love and Happy Marriage, Says Wilfred J. Funk, Publisher-Poet-Society Man

By Carol Bird

MEN and women are weary of wise-cracking and sophistication and the hard-boiled outlook on life. They are out to recapture lost illusions about love and living and each other, eager to be more enthusiastic over the good things of this earth, quite willing to stop pretending they are surfeited with everything in the world.

They are reaching out for all the lost ideals at which the age of cynicism thumbed its nose.

This transitional period from sophistication to the era of romance is now here, according to Wilfred J. Funk, publisher-poet-society man. Before one goes on to explain why Mr. Funk holds this belief, it is necessary to say something about Mr. Funk himself. People are prone to have a preconceived idea of most poets. The classic picture is of the long-haired, frustrated male, gaunt, pathetic, starving in a garret as he writes poetic gems which no one will buy. But Mr. Funk explodes this conception. He is young—perhaps in his early 40s—attractive, prosperous.

He is president of an old, established publishing house. He owns a beautiful forty-room house overlooking the Atlantic Ocean at Southampton, besides a town house at Montclair, N. J. His garage holds seven or eight cars. He is married and has three children. When he isn't busy in his publishing offices in New York City, he is fashioning light verse, which finds its way into the columns of leading newspapers and magazines. He has an iron-bound rule at his home, and that is that two nights every week his study door shall be locked and he be left undisturbed at his writing. His plan is to carry paper with him and jot down notes on the street, in restaurants, everywhere he goes.

When at the shore last summer he wrote verse which appeared in publications daily, averaging about two poems a week.

Not long ago Oglethorpe University bestowed upon him a doctor of literature degree. He already has a bachelor of literature from Princeton, and when he was a student there edited the college publication. Upon his graduation from Princeton he immediately started in at the business end of the publishing house which bears his name, and for fifteen years forgot, apparently, his literary aspirations. But after a decade and a half the old urge returned, and ever since he has worked industriously at writing verse and admits that his real joy centers in this occupation.

"ANY man or woman who has ever got to the top, who has ever succeeded in life, has done so because he or she has been in love with an idea, burning with enthusiasm over something, excited over the prospect of a dream come true. But enthusiasm is denied to sophisticated people. To them it is something too young and crude and lacking in poise to indulge in, and so they maintain their supercilious attitude of being surprised at nothing that might happen to or around them. Sophistication, in my opinion, is the philosophy of failure. Sophisticated people never reach the heights or the depths, and thus miss the real flavor of life.

"To be sophisticated a man or woman has to know enough to assume to know much more than they actually do. And, above all, a sophisticated person feels that he must look with withering scorn on the enthusiastic person, the one who behaves naturally and reveals his true feelings. Such conduct the sophisticate labels as 'infantile.' He outlaws all spontaneity of conduct. The sophisticated role then is the role of age. You cannot be a sophisticated person and a young, alive creature at the same time. And who, after all, wants to embrace the philosophy of age when he is still young and vibrant with life?

"We have had a great outflow of smart, sophisticated and hard-boiled verse. I have written some of it myself. That was because there was a demand for it, and one must, of course, give the public what it craves. But now I hear from many sources that the marketable verse and fiction of the future will be of the romantic type. And it is going to be much more fun to be unrestrained, to let the reins go over the dashboard.

"The sophisticated verse was not so easy to write. It called for too much inhibition, studied pose. The public is fed up on that sort of thing now. It gets tiresome in time. This sophisticated verse was the kind that starts out sounding lovely and romantic, and then there is the final knife-thrust, the tag-line that shows you don't care, after all, for all these beautiful things of the spirit."

MR. FUNK continued: "The guns of Europe destroyed all our lovely ideas of life, love, religion and Christianity. The years that came after formed another transition period. People were not sure of their foundations and so felt that they had to 'kid' religion, laugh at things of the spirit, thumb their noses at idealism and generally behave in a hard-boiled, you've-got-to-prove-it-to-me way. They built up a hard shell around themselves and took the path that is a quick way, a short cut to old age.

"Young people particularly assumed this pose of wisecracking disillusionment. They robbed life of all enchantment. Burned black, seared by the war, they felt that the ideas and ideals of their elders had not held firm and that they had to supplant these weak and faulty ones with a sophistry of their own. They created something new to live by. They sneered, and swung to another extreme, saying to each other: 'It's all the bunk! We'll just laugh off everything. Nothing is worth serious consideration.'

"But this rule of life has proved very unsatisfactory, too. People cannot be happy and serene when they do not possess a sound and wholesome philosophy; when they turn their backs on romance; when they junk religion and things of the spirit. This is sterile living. You will starve and thirst to death if you continue it.

"It does not follow that because a man has illusions and believes in fine and idealistic things that he is a fool or that he is too innocent and credulous to buck the world. A man with illusions is a happy man, and he can also be a worldly man, but without the pose of sophisticated worldliness.

"A sophisticated person on the boat, one who cannot slip over in a great tidal wave of enthusiasm over a gorgeous scene or a blood-red sunset, can still spoil a trip for me. Sophistication of that kind is a gown you put on to hide your real self. You don it in order to create the idea that you are quite superior to the noisy rabble.

"Sophistication is not bad in itself when it is genuine and not a pose, when it is wise but not smart-aleck. But oftener than not it is not the real thing. If a person has great depth and feeling and lives in an age such as this one, he must possess a certain amount of sophistication. If he doesn't he is just a spineless, chaotic romanticist, but his sophistication need not be the artificial one of extreme boredom with everything in life.

"When it is overdone, sophistication is actually a safety device employed by many people in the disturbed sea of life. They are unhappy, feel that they have nothing to tie to. They are in a sea of doubt, and so they pretend not to care about anything. But, notwithstanding this pose of the last ten or fifteen years, I look to a revival of romance and religion, for the two are almost inseparable. Both deal with the emotions. With the return of this pair we may expect a concomitant return of all things of the spirit.

"Plays, books, everything will reflect this change in outlook. The cynical and tearing-down process is nearing an end. Sophistication of the veneer type will die. Sophistication should imply a knowledge of the world without emphasizing too much worldliness. People to be happy must always cling to something of the spirit, to their ideals."

MR. FUNK quoted a sample of his own verse of the sophisticated type. It is called "Summer Memories," and appears in his new book of verse, "Light Lines and Dears":

I can remember still how high waves fell,
And spread their thunder on the open shore:
I can remember things I will not tell,
Kisses long buried in the ocean's roar.

I can remember how the full moon drew
A lane of magic on the silver sea
And shimmering loveliness, my dear, with you
And all the universe engulfing me.

I can remember kneeling as a slave
Before you, asking you your sweet reprieve,
I even can recall the pledge I gave—
And that's damn near a record, I believe!

And then, to illustrate the new verse of the new era, which will shatter no ideals, stab no fine dreams, Mr. Funk quoted another of his poems. It is titled, "When I Am Dead":

These be the dreams you bring to me—
The blue pavilion of the sea
Tented with clouds; ships: starry eyes
Of starry nights: the swift surprise
Of moonlight on a hill: the brave
And carven glory of a wave,
Shattering in a million gems
To star a million diadems.
And I have loved things sweet as these.
The bracelets of the Pleiades
Humming against the wind: a dawn
Vocal with birds. When I am gone,
May these dreams ride the driven rain
And search my buried heart again.

"Even though I could not point to very definite signs that we are marked for a change, I have the faith myself that romance is coming back to mortals again. It is because we are badly in need of something different. Change is healthful. One gets bored by seeing the same thing, weary of being steeped in the hard-boiled outlook.

"We get a world-old hunger for romance, for products of the imagination. I dislike the use of that phrase 'the escape from reality,' but that is what I mean, nevertheless. Romance helps all of us to dilute some of the bitterness of life. It turns our eyes away from disillusionment and disappointment, and gives us a bit of surcease in the turmoil of living. It is an oasis in the desert. We are now turning back the page to something more gentle and lovely.

"Even women's new styles in clothes have the glamour of another age, the aura of other times. I suppose the Paris dressmakers should really be given credit for taking us back to romance.

"I'VE been observing the young people of today. They seem to have serious ideas and to be giving thought to just what is happening in the world. My own boy is already planning his life. And if young girls of today demand romance and illusions from our young men, they are going to get them, for men always do what women want. Women, in the last analysis, always set the standards.

"What will be the result of this new wave of romance which promises to wash over the world? Well, life will take on more charm. We will return to greater happiness, more joy in life, more downright fun. We will not, of course, become different people overnight. But we will not continue to grow up with a small segment of self. We will be more complete persons. We may retain a little of our cynicism, for every one, particularly as she grows older, has a bit of that mixture in his make-up, but on this we will have a superstructure of imagination. And it is the imaginative quality that makes the wheels go round, that makes the world a more beautiful and livable place.

"Lincoln, Shelley, Keats were not sophisticates. They did not have time to be sophisticated. They just stood in front of the world with awe and were overwhelmed by it. And this naivete, this spontaneous quality in their characters was responsible for some of the fine things they gave to future generations. Had they been blase and super-worldly, disillusioned and wisecracking, after the fashion of the cynical folk who are now making their exit from the scene—because it is no longer smart to be hard-boiled—they would never have made their mark upon the world."

Now the 'BOS have a "SKY PILOT of the Rails"

THOUSANDS of Tramps Know and Honor Dr. Robert Irvine Bell, Baptist Preacher, Who Gave Up His Pulpit to "Ride the Rods" and Preach to Knights of the Road

By Fred Denton Moon

A REVOLVER was jabbed out of the shadows at the end of the box car, its blue steel barrel flashing as it caught the rays from a distant switch lamp.

"So you're a preacher, huh?" snarled the big man who crouched behind the gun. "Well, I'm a Russian—'Red,' they call me. I've sworn to kill every damn preacher that crosses my path!"

The second man shuddered as the muzzle of the gun bored into his liver. His eyes darted right and left in search of help, but it was long after midnight and nobody was stirring in the railroad yards. He knew that if he cried out his voice would be swallowed by the empty box cars that stretched away in long lines on each side. He drew a deep breath of air, air that was tainted with fog and engine smoke, and waited—to die.

This was a new experience for him. He had met and chummed with thousands of tramps, and this towering hulk of a man who called himself Red was the first 'bo who had ever resented his overtures of friendship. Red, it seemed, was going to kill him.

BUT Red wasn't ready to shoot. First, he had to satisfy his curiosity. "If you're a preacher," he demanded, "what are you prowlin' 'round here for?"

"I am the chaplain of the hoboes," informed the minister. He spoke with a gentleness that surprised even himself. "I go where the tramps go, and they all know that I am their friend. They call me the Sky Pilot of the Rails."

As he talked, he forgot the big revolver that was pressing against his side. "I'd like to be your friend, too, Red," he said. "Won't you shake hands with me?"

The big hobo recoiled before the preacher's outstretched hand.

"Aw, heck, forgit it, Sky Pilot," he apologized sheepishly. "I didn't recognize you in the dark." He pocketed his gun, shook hands and lumbered off among the shadows.

"And that was the only time that I've ever felt that I was in danger among the 'boes," smiled Dr. Robert Irvine Bell, who is known as the "Sky Pilot of the Rails" to thousands of tramps whom he has befriended since he gave up his church and congregation "to serve as chaplain of the Lost Battalion" in the war of modern life.

If the Sky Pilot hasn't chalked his "sign" on the water tanks and bridges in the freight yards near your home, it is only a matter of time before he will do so. For some day, sooner or later, he is bound to board a freight that will drop him at your city, town, village or flag-stop. Immediately upon arrival he will identify himself to the local police and railroad authorities; ther he will confer with civic officials and parent-teacher association leaders on his plan for an educational drive to show restless and adventure-hungry boys the folly of running away from their homes.

This plan is very dear to the heart of the kindly Sky Pilot, for during the three years he has been "riding the rattlers" and sleeping in hobo "jungles" he has tasted all the bitterness and hardships that fill the life of a tramp. Hardly a day passes that he does not find and send back to a distressed mother a son who had left her to follow the mirage of adventure down endless miles of gleaming steel rails. A day never passes that he does not meet scores of men who are such confirmed tramps that nothing can rehabilitate them until their wandering careers are closed by a watchman's bullet or the grinding wheels of a freight.

Taking the first step to nowhere for thrill and adventure, hunger and hardship. The kindly Sky Pilot has planned an educational drive to show young boys such as these the folly of running away from home

Business attended to, the Sky Pilot will fill his pockets with smoking tobacco and set out to visit the local hobo jungle. Maybe you think there is no such place in your community, but there is. Where there is a train stop, there is bound to be a hobo camp, although you, if you have never been a railroad tramp, might pass it a thousand times without recognizing it as such. Jungles are always located within easy running distance of the tracks where through freight trains pass, convenient to a spring or water tank, and usually near a stream where the hoboes may bathe and wash their clothes.

Having already learned from "signs" chalked on water tanks and bridges "up the road" that their chaplain will be with them, the tramps are not surprised when Dr. Bell suddenly strolls into the lights of their cooking fires. Old-timers, bleary-eyed and ragged, welcome him as a long-lost brother; friends who are but a little dirtier and greasier than when he last saw them in Milwaukee, Tampa, Seattle or Austin, introduce him around among the newcomers, see to it that the tin can from which he drinks his coffee is the largest in the "pantry" and that he is seated on the most comfortable brickbat "settee" in camp.

After exchanging news and gossip, swapping jokes and comparing travel notes, the Sky Pilot preaches a short sermon to the 'boes, prays with them, leads them in singing old-fashioned hymns. Sometimes there is a tramp who can add to the program by rendering a religious selection on the mouth organ or jew's harp; again, there may be enough colored men present to organize a quartet, and then the jungle rings with Negro spirituals.

From the close of the services until a glow in the sky warns the tramps that another unfriendly day will soon be upon them, Dr. Bell pens letters for the 'boes who cannot write, administers first aid and simple medicines to those who are sick or injured, advises others who want his opinion on the problems which confront the knights of the road.

"I HAVE the biggest circuit to ride and the largest congregation to preach to of any minister in America. And I believe I am the most popular preacher in the world, for the members of my 'church' don't have to sit through my sermons often enough to grow tired of me, and I never pass around the collection plate," smiled this ruddy, gray-haired little man who took his master's degree from Washington and Jefferson College, graduated a doctor of divinity from Western Theological School and for several years filled important pastorates in the Baptist Church.

Dr. Bell is such a cultured and accomplished man that he has difficulty in making folks believe that he really pursues such a life of adventure and hardships. But his picture-signature may be found on many a water tank or flop joint between Shreveport and 'Frisco, Boston and Kalamazoo, and the hobo members of his strange "church" know that he has ridden the rods as many thousands of miles as any of them. The only difference between the Sky Pilot's mode of travel and that of the tramps he befriends is that he has permits from railroad officials to ride in, under or on top of any box car in America.

It all began over a cup of coffee in Tallahassee, Fla., nearly four years ago. The Rev. Dr. Bell, who had just given up the pastorate of a church at Fairhope, Miss., had been visiting his sister in Tallahassee. He was waiting for the night train back to Fairhope. A tramp slunk out of the station shadows and approached him as he paced the platform.

"Mister," whined the 'bo, "would you give a poor guy a dime for a cup o' coffee?"

"Come along," said Dr. Bell. Together they walked across to a restaurant. Dr. Bell bought the man a meal and ordered coffee for himself.

"Say, mister," the tramp said suddenly, when he learned that his host was a minister of the gospel, "why don't some guy like you preach to us bums? Everybody in this country has got a chance at a preacher but us hoboes. The army and navy have their chaplains, and the Government even furnishes a psalm singer for the boys in the penitentiary. But nobody gives a hoot about the man on the road. They'll feed us to get rid of us, but they'll kick us in the pants if we try to talk to them."

"I thought it over," said the Sky Pilot. "The train to Fairhope pulled in and left, but I stayed on the platform in Tallahassee trying to make up my mind. That night I decided I'd do it—become chaplain to the vast army of 'knights of the rails.' The 'bo I'd fed showed me the ropes and introduced me around the local jungles, and in a couple of days I'd pulled out on a freight. I've been preaching to hoboes ever since."

DR. BELL'S work, sustained by no religious organization, is carried on by contributions from well-wishers to him personally. A number of his stanchest supporters are former tramps whom he rescued and who are now making good. One of these, a young ex-hobo for whom he obtained employment in a Tennessee city, sends him $1 every month to buy tobacco for the "boys" who are still "on tour." Dr. Bell has a wife and two daughters back home in Columbia, Miss., and he maintains his home through the sale of articles and stories on his adventures in trampdom, of which he has had a large number published in leading magazines.

While the Russian, "Red," is the only 'bo that ever threatened the Sky Pilot's life, Dr. Bell, on the other hand, has directly or indirectly saved the lives of several tramps.

"I went one night," he recalled, "to preach in 'the jungle' at Memphis, Tenn., which is a sort of terminal for all the tramps who travel through the South and Middle West. My congregation being unusually large, it was nearly dawn when I found myself free to return to the city for some sleep. The encampment was near two long railroad bridges, both of which I had to cross, and upon my departure the 'boes cautioned me not to loiter on these trestles, as it was about time for a fast passenger train to pass through.

"I got across the first bridge before I heard the train whistling in the distance, and although it sounded so far away that I was pretty certain there was no danger of it trapping me on the second trestle, something told me to wait. I sat down on a switch block, rolled a cigarette and began to smoke. Several minutes later the engine rounded a bend far up the tracks, and as the beams of the headlight came dancing toward me, I discovered that I was not alone. Crouching in the shadows at the end of the second bridge, his back toward me, was a hobo. Even as I saw him, he stood up, stepped between the rails, and began walking out on the structure to meet the approaching train.

"'HEY, 'bo,' I screamed, starting after him. 'Come back here before you get killed!'

"The man glanced at me, muttered something that I didn't catch, and began to run. I quickened my pace, too, but he was fleet of foot and I could never have caught him if he hadn't tripped on a loose spike nearly halfway across the bridge.

"'What's the big idea?' I demanded, as he fought to tear himself out of my grasp. 'Don't you see that train coming yonder?'

"'Yes,' he answered, 'I see the train. If you don't want to die yourself, you'd better hustle back to the end of the bridge!'

"I glanced up to find the blinding headlight almost in my face," said Dr. Bell. "Already the locomotive was howling over the rails at the far end of the bridge. The structure was too high to jump from, and I knew that I'd have to run as never ran before if I beat the train back to my starting point.

"Struck by a sudden idea, I released my grip on the fellow's coattail. Then, as he started forward, I made a dive and locked my arms around his hips, lifting him like a sack of salt. Then I turned and began to run. I knew the engineer had seen us by this time, because the locomotive's whistle was drowned in the shrieking of the brakes, but I also knew that a train moving at such speed could not be stopped within the length of that bridge. Both our lives depended upon my legs—and did my legs move!

"When I finally reached the end of the trestle the engine was so close behind me that I actually felt its heat upon my body. When I flung the tramp off the rails and leaped to safety, the cowcatcher grazed my ankle."

This tramp who was saved from suicide almost at the cost of the Sky Pilot's life was a former soldier with a wife and two young children who had grown despondent because of his failure to find employment. Thanks to Dr. Bell, he obtained a position in a Tennessee city, and he is the man who now sends the Sky Pilot a dollar every month to buy tobacco for other 'boes who are temporarily "down and out."

The GOAT and the MULE are at it Again

A bit of action in one of the famous gridiron battles for supremacy between Army and Navy, in which the latter was defeated by a score of 10-3

America's Most Colorful Football Struggle, Soon to Be Resumed After an Official Lapse of Five Years, Gives Promise of Reviving the Thrills and Glory That Always Attend These Games

By C. William Duncan

AFTER a cessation of official football activity lasting several years, the famous Navy Goat is about to resume its task of attempting to butt into submission the equally famous Army Mule.

The mule, always a stubborn critter, has been especially stubborn recently, but that old goat, famed for its Navy pluck and persistence, will just keep banging away and some day that mule will fall.

Their meeting marks the resumption of the most historic football feud in America. They will clash on Franklin Field, Philadelphia, amid the fanfare and the panoply of martial music, of color, the plaudits of fair women and stern fighting men, with the excitement of grim strife to add its touch of riotous thrill to the scene.

A lapse of ten years brings back to the sod of Franklin Field this famous fray, resumed with the reaching of an agreemen on eligibility rules.

I saw that struggle of ten years ago and in twenty years as a football fan have never seen a better one.

AS AN ex-midshipman I was "pulling for" Navy, but they lost, 14-17, in as thrilling a game as ever was played on Franklin Field or any other field. The game was played on a cold, raw, windy day, but it was worth all the discomforts. It was a seesaw contest all the way, with first the Army hopeful, then Navy and then Army again.

Up to the fourth period the feat that stood out most prominently was a fine field goal made by Garbisch, of the Army, who kicked from a difficult angle with a strong wind blowing diagonally.

But the feat of Garbisch was to be forgotten later when Navy, in the lead and evidently secure, punted down the field to Smythe, the Army quarterback.

Smythe, over on his left side, tried at first to run up the sideline, found himself blocked, turned and reversed his position and started somewhat backward toward the middle. I had a seat, a poor seat, behind the east goal, and I'll never forget the sensation, if I live to be a hundred years old, of seeing this ball-totter running back toward us and toward his own goal line.

If Smythe had been downed he would have been remembered only as one who was thrown for a loss when his team most needed a gain.

But he got away with it and his run will never be forgotten by those who saw it. In the middle of the field he suddenly found an opening and, proving himself as much of a galloping ghost as Red Grange ever did, he darted through the Navy tacklers and wasn't downed until 10 or 12 yards from the Navy goal line.

Navy stiffened, as they usually do in that situation, and Army could not gain.

So Smythe dropped back and threw a forward pass to Timberlake, who went over for a touchdown and the winning points.

That 1922 game was a great one, but there have been many others to prove that the Army-Navy struggle is a real gridiron fight as well as a social spectacle.

FOR those who love a colorful spectacle, who is there without a desire to look on, to thrill at the sight of those gray-clad cadets and picturesque midshipmen in their paradings across the field, while trumpets blare and bands play?

Presidents have viewed these struggles, diplomats have put aside the cares of state, famed generals and admirals have mingled to view the spectacle.

The first meeting of the teams was in 1890, and Navy won by 24 to 0. They met again the following year, with Army triumphant by 32 to 16. Navy won the next two years by scores of 12 to 4 and 6 to 4.

Feeling ran high then, so high that the powers of the services, sitting in Washington, decided no more games could be played.

A long hiatus followed, an interval of five years. During the latter part of that period Dr. William White, a lover of all sports and for many years a dominant figure in athletics at the University of Pennsylvania, undertook the task of breaking down prejudices and objections from many quarters. It was he who pointed out the possibilities for staging the game on a neutral field and finally won around the Secretaries of War and the Navy to the point of acquiescence.

As we glance over more of the history of the famous game we find a fact worthy of entrance into the strange-beliefs category. There was a day when tickets for the Army-Navy game could not be given away.

That was on the final Saturday of November, 1899, when relations were resumed, with old Franklin Field and its 20,000 seating capacity—a huge amount of spectators then—as the battleground.

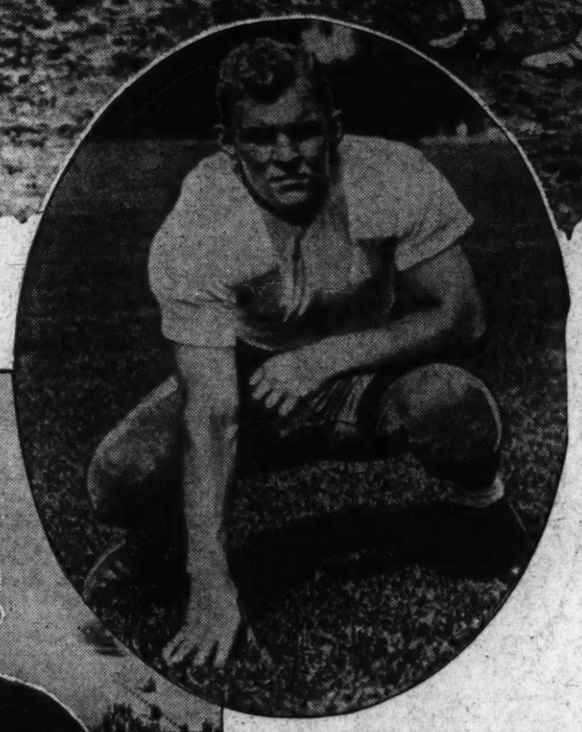
Penn found it impossible to dispose of the tickets other than those allotted to the two institutions. Nobody wanted them, and Army won the game by 17 to 5 before a comparatively small audience.

But that condition of indifference to the game did not last long.

Came the reign of the great Charlie Daly, who left Harvard a finished football player and entered West Point to immediately become its outstanding hero on the gridiron. Those who loved football saw some of the most sensational play the game has ever known then, and officialdom began to take notice, with the sport-loving President, Theodore Roosevelt, pointing the way.

Interest in the game grew tremendously until the pinch for accommodations began to be felt. One-third of the tickets were given to Penn and these were sold and the proceeds turned over in equal amounts to the Navy Relief Society and the Army Relief Society. But in 1905 the demand on both academies for tickets became so great that they insisted on having additional tickets out of Penn's one-third. When the request was refused the Navy finally gave in to the Army's demands and consented to play the game in Princeton, although the Army wanted it in New York.

The firing of a twenty-one-gun salute and a moment of silence in honor of departed comrades, a solemn incident when Army and Navy met on the Pacific coast in 1927 as part of the Armistice Day celebration of that year



James R. Reedy, captain of the Navy team, which has not beaten Army since 1921, when the soldiers were held scoreless

THAT 1905 clash was memorable. In many ways it was a farce. The accommodations at Princeton were extremely inadequate, due to the inability of the single-track railroad that connected Princeton Junction with the university, to handle the crowds. There were ample seating arrangements, but the crowds could not reach them. The trains from New York had right of way and those from Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington could wait. President Roosevelt did not arrive until the game was well under way and then tore his trousers climbing over barbed wire with which his official box was surrounded.

Throughout the day it stormed and was raw and disagreeable. Thousands of men and women, regardless of their position or station, walked through miles of mud and water; generals, admirals and diplomats sat down on the curbstones in tired, wet disgust to eat sandwiches and chunks of pie as some consolation—and the game was returned to Franklin Field the following year. Until 1909 it remained there, and then the death of a cadet in a game against Harvard resulted in the Army-Navy game being called off.

Milton F. Summerfelt, left guard and captain of th Army team, who hopes to add another victory for West Point when his team clashes with Navy at Franklin Field, Philadelphia

PLAY was resumed the following year and remained in Philadelphia until 1913. Then the Army delivered an ultimatum that the game must be played in New York, where the Polo Grounds could offer greater seating capacity by 20,000 than Franklin Field. The Navy refused and long negotiations resulted, with the Navy finally giving in on condition that the game be played in Philadelphia and New York in alternate years. A four-year agreement was signed, the 1913 game being in New York and that of 1914 returning to Philadelphia. Under the agreement that of 1916 should have come to Philadelphia, but the Navy waived its rights when the pressure for tickets became of such proportions that the Polo Grounds was the only solution.

Due to the war, there were no games in 1917 and 1918, but the game was resumed in New York the following year and remained there until the University of Pennsylvania proposed the erection of the new Franklin Field Stadium, with seating accommodations even greater than the Polo Grounds.

There is tremendous interest in the game throughout the services. The Army and the Navy await news of the outcome in every corner of the world. To every wardroom of every ship on foreign station, to every isolated barracks and post where the doughboy looks after the troubles of others, radio carries the story of each game's outcome, and there is rejoicing or gloom in proportion to the final score. From general to buck private, from admiral of the fleet to coal passer, the army and the navy look with interest for the result.

Every college where football is played has its long line of those whose names command the adulation of those who follow—the hero list. But in the army and navy there is that element more picturesque surrounding those who have gone before to earn fame on the gridiron and later on the field of battle.

What is more calculated to arouse a desire to emulate than the story of Worth Bagley, Navy's diminutive quarterback of more than a generation gone! A fighting man if there ever was one, he proved it first on the gridiron, where, despite his size, he gained fame among a breed o' giants, and later when he remained at his post of duty on the deck of the Winslow at Cardenas under a withering burst of Spanish fire that killed him.

Those who recall the game of 1912, when the Navy won by 6 to 0, may have memories of Nicholls, the quarterback whose spectacular play ruled the game. Shortly afterward he was commissioned, but resigned in 1913 and was commissioned in the British Army during the war. Wounded in action with that gallant group of first defenders who went across the Channel, he insisted on going back to his troops before the effects of the wound were gone and was killed.

THEIR names are legion, those great stars who have gained fame when the cadet and midshipman clashed—Oliphant, who almost alone was responsible for tearing the Navy apart in 1915; Hyatt, the perfect field general; Pullen, the Alaska giant; Pop Graves, the Army mammoth who refused to tell who the Yale man was who injured him so badly he walked with a limp for years; Tipton, the Army center who forced a change in the rules by kicking a loose ball time after time when he had no chance to scoop it up until it went over the enemy's goal line, where he fell on it for a touchdown; Jonas Ingram, a member of a family of Annapolis greats, and Jack Dalton, who won two successive games for Navy with his marvelous goals kicked from placement.

Big Bill Ingram, now coach at California, was the football great when I was a plebe at Annapolis, and there have been dozens of others, before and since. What Navy rooter can ever forget the gallant Barchet, while at West Point they'll always remember Red Cagle, Lighthorse Harry Wilson and countless others?

People who love football for the game alone get their thrills out of the fight shown for sixty minutes of play on the gridiron. The fair ones exclaim at the snappy marching of the handsome cadets and midshipmen. And the people who admire school spirit will nowhere find more superb cheering than that of the young men from the two service schools.

In many colleges throughout the country the old spirit isn't what it was twenty years ago. Like the modern family, the student body has more diversified interests and adopts a more sophisticated air. College spirit, to many, is an inner feeling which shouldn't be displayed too blatantly.

But not so at Annapolis or West Point. The students from those schools start cheering fifteen minutes before game time and never stop, except during signal calling, until the final gun.

But now the game has been resumed officially, and everybody is happy—including the butting Navy Goat and that stubborn Army Mule. May they battle undisturbed for many years!

A Table Set For Ten

By Alice Dyar Russell

HERE Is a Thanksgiving Day Story With a Setting in the Western Desert and a Happy Romance for the Ending

"Lonesome? Oh, it's lonesome all right," said the elder woman

IT WAS 5 o'clock on the afternoon before Thanksgiving Day. The sun had set behind the purple buttes; only a dull glow of gold outlined their saw-toothed mass. The bitter, creeping cold of mountain altitudes settled down over the wide, bleak valley of the desert. Mrs. Matson, in her solitary homesteader's shack, was working in her kitchen by the light of a single kerosene lamp.

A strong wind shrieked around the house, shook the flimsy walls, drove the freezing air through every crack and flung whirling grains of sand against the window-panes. In his snug basket behind the stove, where a brisk wood fire was burning, an old, lame fox terrier lifted his head and whined. Mrs. Matson looked up sharply from the turkey, into whose vast interior she was cramming savory breadcrumbs, and listened with a curious expectancy.

She was a tall, erect, deep-bosomed woman, with black and silver hair cropped close like a man's; her face was lined and worn; the eyes set in gaunt sockets, dark and sorrowful and serene, were hauntingly beautiful; her strong brown hands showed the marks of outdoor toil.

"You've got quicker ears than mine," she said approvingly to the dog. "That's a car sure enough. We're going to have company."

SHE went eagerly to the door, pulled aside the rag rug that was laid to keep out the cold, and opened to the wind. The light was failing, the hills were black, dust obscured the view; but she could make out a sport car coming slowly through the gate-posts and following the curve of the drive to the back. It stopped by the bare trellis, and after a minute a girl in a fur coat alighted wearily. Mrs. Matson smoothed down her apron and pushed the screen door wide.

"Have you got any gas?" the girl asked brusquely, walking into the kitchen.

"Sit down, sit down by the fire and warm yourself," urged Mrs. Matson, hospitably. "Cold out, ain't it? That wind cuts just like a knife. Winter's come, I guess. It held off a good while, but it can't hold off no longer. I look for it to snow most any day." She showed the touching eagerness to talk of one who lives alone.

"I'm freezing," said the girl, shivering; she pulled off gauntleted gloves and stretched her hands over the stove. Mrs. Matson shoved back a kettle, fed the fire, rearranged the rug; her eyes were extraordinarily bright.

A close brown hat covered the girl's hair; under delicate, arched brows burned eyes of the deepest blue. Her face was flawless in color and line, made for lovely adventure, framed for laughter and delight, but clouded now by sullen unhappiness. One slim finger held a brilliant emerald guarding a platinum wedding ring.

"I certainly thanked the Lord when I saw your light," the girl still spoke abruptly, sitting straight and tense. "I didn't know what on earth I was going to do, out here miles from nowhere. I left the highway and turned in here—thought I'd found a short cut. The wind nearly blew me off the road. To run out of gas like any idiot! I never thought to fill up before I left Victorville. I—I just never thought." She did not once look at Mrs. Matson or the room; she seemed entirely oblivious of her surroundings. Her gaze was turned inward; her preoccupation with herself.

"There's always something to thank the good Lord for," Mrs. Matson remarked cheerfully, going back to the table and bending a critical eye on the turkey. "I can give you a little gas, enough to get you back to the highway and a service station, if you're bound to go on.

"You wouldn't believe how many drivers get caught up here in just your fix. They will have it this valley cuts through the mountains. I don't own a car myself—Jimsey there is the only thing on all fours I've got—but I like to keep a little gas on hand so's I can accommodate when folks stop by and want some." When the girl made no response, but still stared somberly at the reddening stove, she added, gently, "It's a lonesome night to be out in, ain't it? Hear that wind! Don't it seem like it would tear you to pieces?"

"Lonesome? Oh, it's lonesome all right!" The girl laughed harshly. "Thanksgiving Eve, too! But what if it is? I haven't anything to be thankful for!" She gave herself a little shake and looked around.

IT WAS a cheery place, Mrs. Matson's kitchen, crowded now with many tempting preparations. A large bowl of cranberry sauce stood on the dresser, flanked by fragrant mince and pumpkin pies. A kettle sent out toothsome steam from the stove. Potatoes, beets and turnips, washed and peeled, reposed cozily in the iron sink. Apples and nuts and celery and raisins decorated the outer boundaries of the table where Mrs. Matson worked on the turkey. Odors of spiced fruit and freshly baked gingerbread scented the atmosphere.

"You look as if you were expecting company," commented the girl. "That turkey is big enough for ten!"

"Well, I may have company," Mrs. Matson replied, meditatively, poking a forefinger into the plump breast of the noble bird, "and then again, I may not. I set the table for ten."

"That's a queer state to be in!" The girl was roused to interest in spite of herself. "It seems to me I wouldn't go to all of that work unless I were sure of company. You aren't actually stuffing that huge turkey, are you, not knowing whether there will be any one to eat it?"

Mrs. Matson smiled, strangely. "I've stuffed a turkey every Thanksgiving since I was married, except in 1920. That year I didn't, and I've always been sorry. I don't like to think about it even now. When I come to the desert, to have a spot I could call my own, and staked out my claim, it didn't look as if there'd ever be anybody to eat with me. But there always has been. The Lord sends 'em, I guess. He knows I make ready."

"I don't believe I'd depend on the Lord in your place for that or anything else," said the girl. Her laugh was not pleasant. "What sort of company can you possibly get out here in this God-forsaken place?"

"You've come, ain't you?" asked Mrs. Matson, still with that mysterious, wistful smile.

"Why—yes." The girl was plainly taken aback. "But I'm going on. That is, I suppose so. And anyway——" she stopped, frowning.

"Year before last," Mrs. Matson told her, "we had a big snow, unexpected, and a busload of tourists was stalled out here. They filled my tables twice over. Hungry! My! Last Thanksgiving Day a parcel of boys came by. They'd been turned off without their pay from a mine up yonder in the mountains. They'd lived on beans for a month and didn't have a cent in their pockets. Land, how they fell on that turkey! There warn't a mite of meat left on the bones time they got through." Her face lighted.

"Haven't you a family of your own?" the girl inquired, shyly. "You're just the kind, somehow, that ought to have dozens of grandchildren. Where are they all?" Her gloom lifting for a moment, sweetness shone out. She was lovable as a flower.

Mrs. Matson did not speak immediately. She gazed down, absently fingering the celery. An invisible hand passed over her features, cutting deeper the lines of age and care, drawing down the patient mouth in a more sorrowful curve, hollowing further the dark, deep-set eyes; but when she lifted them, they still had their serene and haunting beauty. The face of sorrowing motherhood looked out from hers.

"I don't know as I'd better tell you about that," she said, painfully. "You might say mine's been a sad life, take it all in all, and I guess I ought not to let it darken this holiday night. Such things ain't for young ears." She studied the absorbed young face turned to hers, so lovely, so untouched by age, experience, care, all that had silvered her own hair and plowed the deep furrows.

"I have it tucked away safe in my heart—that's the best place, I guess. I did have children," she added hastily, almost apologetically. "Two boys and a girl. They're dead now; they didn't live to grow up. I never saw 'em but little children. And my husband is dead. I'm alone in the world." A soft sound came from the girl. Mrs. Matson smiled at her, luminous through mist.

"There," she continued. "It don't do to dwell on those things. I learned that. I went through a pit of sorrow, you might say, but I come out of it. The year my husband died I didn't see how I could get up a Thanksgiving dinner. I sat with my hands in my lap, like a dumb creature, the whole day, and give myself up to black thoughts. And in that house—it was a big place with lots of little tucked-up rooms rented out—a young thing no older'n you, but out of money and scared to go home, was turning on the gas to die. And in another room, a nice old lady had only tea and bread to eat. I ought to have been getting up a dinner for them. It come to me plain, and I took a resolve that so long as I was given strength, I'd cook for the Lord's own, since I hadn't any of mine, and He's kept me able to do it, and I'm thankful to Him."

SILENCE fell in the warm, lighted little room. Outside, the wind shrieked in the dark and windows rattled eerily and sand stung the panes. Mrs. Matson crossed to the stove, lifted the lid and put in more wood. The girl reached out a hand and took hold of her apron.

"I want to tell you about it," she pleaded. "Won't you sit down here beside me?"

"Why, that'll be real cozy and nice," Mrs. Matson answered cheerfully. "There ain't a thing I have to do for a spell. I'll draw right up, and you throw back your coat and take off your hat like as if you were going to stay a spell."

"I ran away from my husband," the girl said, while the lamp shone on the bright glory of her hair. She kept the fold of apron in her fingers as if it gave her courage to speak. "I met him in Victorville when the Southern Pacific came in from the East—I hadn't seen him for six weeks—I drove all the way from the city to meet him. We quarreled—on the station platform—and I ran away—and he went on in the train without me."

"Why did you do that, dear?" Mrs. Matson asked gently, holding the slender, ringed fingers.

"He went on without me!" the girl repeated tensely. "Oh, I never thought he would do that!" Her face crumpled; she bent her head and began to cry stormily. "We've been married only seven months—and he—went on without me!"

"But you said you ran away from him," Mrs. Matson reminded her, when the heat of her tears had passed. "Can't you tell me just how it was?"

"We quarreled," the girl said, wiping her eyes with a fluffy, inadequate handkerchief. "Oh, we quarreled dreadfully! About—Thanksgiving. Where we should eat our dinner. It wasn't silly," she explained with dignity. "There was a principle at stake. That's why I held out. I knew if I didn't hold out now, why—why, I'd always be a—a doormat!"

"I see," murmured Mrs. Matson, encouragingly, studying her face. "You two wanted to have your Thanksgiving at different places?"

The girl twisted her handkerchief. "I wanted us to have our Thanksgiving—our first Thanksgiving—just by ourselves. He wanted us to go to his mother's. He accepted for us!" the girl cried. "He accepted—without telling me! Oh, I'm tired of going to his mother's—every single anniversary—every single holiday! I'm tired . . . his mother—I'm tired of all his family! I suppose you think I'm terrible?" she appealed, defiantly, to Mrs. Matson.

"Why, no, I don't. Most young brides like to be by themselves," the older woman observed, quietly. "They ain't got to the point where families mean much of anything."

"Of course not! And I was perfectly reasonable—perfectly! Here he'd been away six weeks on a business trip—you'd think, wouldn't you, that after that—the first time he'd been away from me—he'd want to be with just me? No! He has to drag his mother in—the whole family! He has to think what they will say—how they want him for Thanksgiving! I don't know how many of them there are—cousins and uncles and aunts—they have to set a great long table—there're children, too!"

"A great long table—and children?" breathed Mrs. Matson. Her eyes glowed. "My!"

"Yes. And here I'd planned a darling little dinner just for us two. You see, I hadn't been well—I had the flu in September—and while Hugh went to New York on business, I took a cabin at Nine Palms. I could get my own meals at the ranch house or cook, as I pleased. I loved it—and I thought Hugh would love it, too. I planned to meet him at Victorville—I wired him—and I thought we'd have the drive over, and I'd ordered a turkey fixed for us—and—everything!

"When I told him about it, he said it was all off—I was to get on the train with him and go down to Los Angeles to his mother's. I said I wouldn't—we ought to have our own Thanksgiving. He said he'd accepted—his mother was expecting us—as if that made any difference, with the rafts of people she'll have! I said I wouldn't go—he could just come with me or go without me—and he jumped back on the train—and it p-pulled out!"

AGAIN the bronze head went down in a flood of tears; the storm was brief, however; she looked up with an angry flash. "There! I won't cry any more! Not for him! He's shown me how much he cares for me! After the train went I got into my car again and I just shot out of Victorville! I never thought about gas or anything. I got here in an hour and a half—that's fifty miles an hour!" She exulted like a small, bad girl.

"Nine Palms is a good thirty miles from here," Mrs. Matson said in a careful tone.

"Yes," replied the girl, drearily. "I ought to be on my way. If you'll give me the gas——" but she did not move.

"You might stay here tonight," Mrs. Matson ventured, greatly daring. "You look tired, and it's no weather to drive in. You could go over in the morning if you wanted, when it's nice and light and the wind is down. I have an extra bed in my bedroom—it's got a real good mattress and I'd make it up warm."

"All right. I don't care what I do," the girl returned, indifferently; then, rousing herself with an effort, "Of course—you're good to ask me! I'd like it—really."

"That's settled then." Mrs. Matson spoke briskly. "Just let me take your coat, dear. Perhaps you'll tell me your name. I've got some good thick vegetable soup stewing in that kettle; we might make out a supper with that and some hot cocoa and those ginger cakes, they're real light and tasty. I'm not one that gets up a big dinner the night before Thanksgiving. Let's keep our appetites, I say."

"Things smell awfully good," smiled the girl. "My name is Mona Elliott. I hope you'll call me Mona." Her tear-stained face, brightening, revealed how very young she was; no more than 20, certainly.

An hour or two later, while she watched Mrs. Matson fill a hot-water bag for her bed, Mona spoke out of a moody silence. "I suppose Hugh is down in the city now, having a grand time with his family. They'll be glad to have him to themselves. Not that it matters to me in the least. I don't care what he does!" She affected to yawn. "How can men be so dumb?" she burst out fiercely, as Mrs. Matson still said nothing. "Did you ever quarrel when you were first married?" she asked the serene-eyed woman curiously. "I don't believe you did—you look so sensible and good!"

Something infinitely sad breathed from that furrowed face. "Yes," she acknowledged. "Yes. I did. I guess all brides do. I had a hot temper. I wanted my own way. I can remember a good many quarrels. I have a lot of time for remembering. You do when you get old."

She screwed in the top of the bag and wrapped a soft towel around it. "They don't make very good things to remember," she added, reflectively, after a moment. "I'd give a good deal to have done some things different. So will you, when you're my age," she smiled lovingly at Mona. "Suppose you take your things off right here by the fire. I'll go and get your bed ready." She stepped away, a kind of brisk awe imbuing all her movements.

Very early in the morning, after an exhausted, dreamless sleep, Mona awoke to find the other bed empty. She heard Mrs. Matson stirring in the kitchen and smelled a wood fire crackling. She sprang into the cold room and dipped her face into the freezing water of the basin.

"Get a taste of the morning, while the oatmeal's cooking," urged Mrs. Matson. It was not for her to comment on what she read in the girl's eyes.

Wrapped in her heavy coat, Mona walked around the house. There was no wind; it was unearthly still. She seemed flooded in light and space. The air was brittly clear and cold; over an empty sunlit plain she could see great distances; every detail stood out sharp and clear. The mountains that rimmed the far horizon were dreamily mauve and gray.

She drew in deep breaths of the light, keen air. The frost brought bright color to her cheeks as she walked about the wind-swept garden. Order was everywhere, and everywhere signs of the most painstaking labor; in the many varieties of cactus, transplanted from the wild; in the stones lining the walks or piled in tidy heaps; in the rose-bushes, carefully sheltered from the wind; in the leafless vines trained and tied to the trellises. The neat little back porch was swept and clean; bunches of dried herbs and everlasting flowers hung from the side and top. There were a few chickens and turkeys in well-cared-for pens. Kindling was piled under a shed. The pump by the well had a piece of felt sewed around the handle.

No lightest wind moved; the very hills seemed to hold their breath. For a long time the girl looked out over the vast gray solitudes of the desert. Its arid beauty, its cold peace, the remoteness and severity of those far-reaching, dun-colored wastes, laid a quiet finger on her fierce, hot youth. When she went in at Mrs. Matson's call, her eyes held a different look.

BREAKFAST was eaten in the warm, good-smelling kitchen. The coffee was strong and hot; the bread toasted a golden brown over live coals; the sliced pink ham and white and yellow eggs fried to perfection. Mona consumed everything with appetite down to the oatmeal and a large dish of prunes. Jimsey sat alertly by his mistress' side, watching for stray bits to come his way.

Through the door into the next room—the only other room besides the bedroom—Mona could see a lengthened table spread with a white cloth, a bouquet of frost-bitten roses and white desert holly in the center; chairs were drawn up in readiness. The thought of the lonely heart that prepared a feast for unknown guests brought a lump to the girl's throat. It did something else—just why, she could not have told. Impetuously, surprising even herself, she spoke.

"If I start at once after breakfast, if I make good time all the way, I can easily get there by 2 o'clock, the time Mother Elliott always has dinner on Thanksgiving Day."

"Your husband will make you welcome, I have no doubt." The slightly stilted fashion of Mrs. Matson's speech did not deceive Mona. She saw tears rising in her friend's eyes. She rose and rushed around the table and buried her head in the gingham lap.

"Oh, I'd like to stay with you!" she cried. "I'd like to eat your Thanksgiving dinner—but not without Hugh! You wouldn't want me to do it without Hugh!"

"No, my dear, no," said Mrs. Matson with trembling lips, her hands resting on the shining soft waves of Mona's hair.

"I'll go; but I'll never forget being here—I'll never forget how good you've been to me—I'll never forget you, Mrs. Matson!" She drew her down for a kiss.

Jimsey, that old, wise, lame fox terrier, pointed his nose at the door and uttered a short, sharp bark.

"He hears something!" exclaimed Mrs. Matson, disengaging herself.

"It's a car coming!" Mona sprang up. Wild hope transfigured her face.

There was a mingling of steps on the back porch; a quick, hard knock. At Mrs. Matson's summons a tall young man burst in; behind the tall young man came a weedy individual and two smaller individuals, saved from weediness only by extreme youth. The young man's fine coat was buttoned wryly, his head wind-blown and hatless, his handsome countenance haggard, with bloodshot, anxious, searching eyes, that went beyond Mrs. Matson, that found Mona, that changed to a relief and joy so intense they were almost anguish.

"Oh, Mona, Mona;" was all he could say. "Oh, Hugh!" was her adequate reply. They rushed together, clutched as if they had been years parted, as if only the direct intervention of Heaven had at last united them. Even when they broke away, their hands would not part, their eyes returned again and again to a rapturous contemplation of each other.

"Meet Pa Hinkleman!" The young man waved with a lordly gesture toward those who had entered with him; the three were staring at the plentitude of food displayed in Mrs. Matson's kitchen in a kind of rapt ecstasy. It was easy to believe that no such sight had ever dawned before on their pale eyes. "One of our vast army of unemployed and unemployables!" continued Hugh enthusiastically. "Meet Willy Hinkleman! Meet Johnnie Hinkleman! Had you been with me during the stress of recent events, you could have met also Clara Hinkleman and Mamie and Katie and still other Hinklemans—eight, in fact. Two sets of twins, Heaven help them!"

"Did you ever hear the like!" ejaculated Mrs. Matson. A strange glow was beginning to pervade her being. Skies were turning rosy.

PA HINKLEMAN blinked and grinned, his watery, ineffective glance stole to the turkey resting amply in the roasting pan. Willy and Johnny had spotted the row of pies. Their eyes grew big; their mouths stood open.

"Darling, where have you been? You didn't come back all the way?" radiant Mona crooned deliciously. Color flooded her face. She became more beautiful every moment.

"Mona, I got off at the next station. When I couldn't hire a car, I bought one. I was wild. I chased to Nine Palms—I broke all the speed laws. You weren't there! And the wind blowing ninety per. You might have gone into a ditch! Lord, what a scare I had! I've been out all night, searching. I've scoured the country. I've stopped at every shack. I've rounded up every desert rat. I know the status and occupation of every inhabitant.

"After daybreak I came upon Pa Hinkleman, who lives on a homestead twenty miles from here with a family more flourishing than his fortunes. He told me about a road leading into this valley from the highroad and kindly offered to show me the way. Willy and Johnnie also kindly offered. I tore them from their breakfast—on the whole, no great loss. We burned up the road. But when I saw that yellow car of yours standing outside here in this hole of a valley, my heart did a U-turn. Angel, I thought you'd been kidnapped!"

"Out all night! Darling!" moaned Mona.

"Without any breakfast! Oh my, my!" cried Mrs. Matson, aroused from an unfathomable concentration on the two Hinkleman offshoots in front of her. "What you need is a good hot cup of coffee! I can fry up ham and eggs for all of you in no time." She beamed at the idea.

"We'll go to Nine Palms for dinner or any other darned place you say," Hugh Elliott fervently assured his wife, as he held out his plate for a third helping. Pa Hinkleman and Willy and Johnnie were earnestly engaged at the other end of the table—impossible to count their helpings.

"No, Hugh. We'll drive down and have Thanksgiving dinner with the family. They'll be expecting us. That is, darling, I'll drive and you can go to sleep on my shoulder. I think——" she flashed a smile at Mrs. Matson—"it will be nice to remember when I'm old!"

"And if you be so kind, sir, as to let Mr. Hinkleman have the use of that other car, he can bring back his whole family to dinner here," said Mrs. Matson, with the blissful air of one to whom things too good to be true are happening. "Willy says they've never been invited out to Thanksgiving dinner—now think of that!"

"O. K.," Hugh agreed, genially. "I'll give him the car!"

There was a hubbub from Willie and Johnnie. Pa Hinkleman grinned wider than ever. Jimsey, the terrier, bounced all over the room.

Then there was the packing of Mona's things and the loading of them into the car. Soon she was tucked in beside Hugh, who sat at the wheel this time. The starter kicked over and, with a wave of their hands, the yellow roadster was ready to start down the long, winding road that led past the ranch house.

Then Pa Hinkleman entered the old car that Hugh had left him. Willie and Johnnie clambered aboard, there was a sputter and the engine started. They, too, were on their way to the rest of the Hinklemans to spread the good news.

Mrs. Matson stood out in the cold wind that was rising again and waved her apron in farewell, first to the black car of ancient vintage that held the three happy Hinklemans; second to the spruce yellow one that held the two happy Elliotts. Then with a light step she hurried back to the kitchen and put the turkey in the oven. There would be ten guests for dinner.

FOR THE WASHINGTON POST BOYS AND GIRLS

The Junior Post.

SECTION OF THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 20, 1932.

SPIRIT OF THANKSGIVING MEANS ALSO GENEROSITY

In These Times of Adversity We Should Share With Others

Dear Post Boys and Girls: Are The Post boys and girls duly grateful for the many blessings which have been theirs during the past year?

Some of you may wonder, perhaps, how The Junior Post editor knows about these blessings.

The reason is that in this great land of ours the boys and girls are sheltered as in no other land on the face of the globe.

First of all, we should be thankful for the blessings of Freedom. You will remember that a few days ago we celebrated Armistice Day in which all thought of the close of the great World War. The men and women who gave their lives in that struggle did so to keep this and other nations free and homes of liberty. They were willing to die that their countries might live and we should never forget their gift to us.

Then you should be thankful for your homes. Perhaps the shadow of want has come near to some of them during these months of depression. But millions of children in the United States are not so well off as you are. Think of these other boys and girls and do not waste your food. When you have finished with your clothes and have outgrown them or gotten some new ones, ask your mother to let you give the old ones, if they are still worth wearing, to some organization like the Red Cross or the Salvation Army, which will pass them on to some children less favored than yourselves.

American boys and girls should be grateful for the chance all have to get a real education in our public schools. The taxpayers of the city and country pay for these schools just to make sure that all our boys and girls have a chance to obtain valuable knowledge in this way. Get the best out of your school days. You will look back on them in other years as the very happiest days of your life. In school you may obtain the tools that will make you carve out your lives and become useful men or women in the years that are before you.

So when Thanksgiving Day dawns next Thursday I want all of you to remember the things for which you should be thankful on this day. Inasmuch as this has been George Washington's Bicentennial year, you should remember this great figure with gratitude for all he did in his day and generation to save and help this country.

Of course, Thanksgiving means a feast, too, turkey, cranberries, mince and pumpkin pie and other goodies to most of us. Look about you and see if your friends are going to have as happy a time as Mother plans for you. If not, ask her to let you divide your good dinner with some child who without your help might go hungry on that day. No child is too young to think of others. If you do, then you will be sure of a happy Thanksgiving for yourself.

A joyous holiday to all of you!

Why the Pilgrims Came to America.

In England, the Protestants of the Church of England began to quarrel about church matters. The Puritans withdrew from the church because they wanted to worship in their own way. King James I did not like the Puritans because he thought their attacks upon the church were upon him and his government. He had his soldiers break up their meetings and put them in prison.

Soon a little band of Puritans left England and went to Holland, calling themselves Pilgrims. They soon left Holland and sailed to America, where the settlement of Plymouth began on December 21, 1620.

At first the building of houses was very slow, for the cold weather often kept the men from working. Sickness spread among them, and by the end of the winter there were not many left.

The settlers made friends with the Indians, and the Indians taught them how to plant corn and other things.

When autumn came, the health of the Pilgrims had been restored, and a large crop of corn had been raised, and enough of fuel put up for the coming winter.

Gov. Bradford set a day for thanksgiving to God for the blessings to the colony. So the custom began of setting aside one day in the year for a thanksgiving.

When James I died, his son, Charles I became king. The new king treated the Puritans worse than his father, James I did. Some of the Puritans in England decided to follow the example of the Pilgrims in planting a colony in America. So in 1628 they sailed to America and the settlement of Salem began, not far from Plymouth.

The persecution of the Puritans in England had become so severe that more Puritans took refuge in America. John Winthrop was elected governor of this band of Puritans, and in 1630 he crossed the ocean with a large party of Pilgrims in a fleet of four vessels.

There were not enough houses in Salem for these people, so they scattered along the shores of Massachusetts Bay, building new towns. Among these was Boston, the capital of the colony.

Sleepy Time.

The flowers nod, the old cat creeps,
The moon shines o'er the hill;
The youngest lamb has gone to sleep,
The smallest bird is still.

The world is full of sleepy things,
And lit with candle light;
The nests are filled with folded wings,
Goodnight, goodnight, sleep tight.

A Muskedine Hunt.

Last Sunday we visited one of my aunts. She lives several miles out in the country. When we reached her house we found other relatives there.

The women soon repaired to the kitchen, the men sat on the porch talking, while the young people and children played games.

Auntie came out on the porch and said to us, "How would you children like to go muskedine hunting!"

"Fine! Fine! Let's go!" we said.

We ran into the house to get straw hats and buckets. Then we started off. We went across a large corn field, until we came to a barb-wire fence. The fence was climbed and we found ourselves at the edge of the woods. We followed a well-known path for about 2 miles into the heart of the forest. On and on we walked. It was midday. The brightest rays of the sun were shining down on us. Large branches brushed our faces, as we passed along. Everyone was hot and tired. Some of the smaller children began to cry.

Then we espied a large muskedine vine. Everyone ran joyously to it.

Muskedines are sometimes called wild grapes. They are dark purple in color and are about the size of a crabapple. They grow in bunches as grapes do.

The buckets were filled and we ate as many as we wanted, although everyone was cautioned not to eat too many of the hot muskedines because they might make us sick.

"I think we had better start home now," someone suggested.

So our long hike home was begun. Everyone was really glad when we finally reached home.

Bow, wow, wow, wow! I have just come from Emily's birthday party—a surprise party—anybody would be surprised with all those good things to eat, even an editor. I took my glasses with me, so I could decide which things looked best. But I put them in my vest pocket after I got there. Because I remembered that an editor should not stare and anyway everything was so good. I called Hop-Toy right up and told him birthday parties were better than weddings and he never had a single argument to offer in return. Daisy and Spider had presents for Emily and so did I. I went down street and shopped from counter to counter until I found just what I wanted—bow, wow, wow. Mike Great Dane kept edging Daisy and Spider out of the way, but a "good time was had by all." Bow, wow, wow, wow, wow!

Ming Pekingese, who lives with the Gracious Lady and Little Laughing Waters, had a birthday last week, too He was 11 years old. Of course his nice new tailored overcoat he got for a birthday present is very, very nice, but he never wears eyeglasses. He had nice things to eat on his birthday, but he always has them anyway and has a nice silk-covered couch on which to sleep.

Maggie Scotch Terrier Roosevelt telephoned me last night from the Governor's Mansion in Albany that she will be in Washington about March 4. I guess Maggie will like the White House and the White House Grounds, for Mr. and Mrs. Owl and Mr. and Mrs. Rabbit and Mr. and Mrs. Squirrel and their families make it quite lively there. Mr. and Mrs. Owl and all the little Owls are as wise as they can be. They have looked from their home, the watch tower on the tall tree, at the comings and goings of many a White House family and all the pets that come with them. Mr. and Mrs. Squirrel are old residents, too. All the White House squirrels family for many generations have lived and hunted food and chatted and listened to all the goings-on about them through many a Democratic and Republican administration. They have voted that they are all nice and it is just as easy to turn from a Republican to a Democrat or a Democrat to a Republican for them as it is for the other voters of the country.

Mr. Tweet Canary has been singing his election song all week. He has at last filled in with the vacant places. He says "Roosevelt" real loud now and "Democrat" in the places he skipped so carefully before election day. I believe Mr. Tweet must really be some relation to the White House Owl family.

Xantippe and Socrates, turtles, who live in a glass house and never throw stones, went to Emily's party. But they were so hard shelled that they never showed one bit of enthusiasm even when Mike Great Dane offered to ride them on his back and Daisy and Spider offered them some nice ice cream. Socrates even asked for a shell to sit on when there were so many soft cushions around, too.

Dear Ding-How: How are you? Thanks for printing my last letter. Ding-How, you are not the only one that can wear spectacles. I found out that my mistress once wore glasses and got her to let me try them on. You should see me with those specks on. I'm a honey.

Tom has grown a lot since I wrote last. He is very jealous of me now, because I wear my mistress' spectacles and he can't. Mew, mew, mew!

"Bet."

The Origin of Thanksgiving.

In the year of 1620 a little band of Pilgrims came to America. Why had they left their nice homes in England to sail many miles over the stormy Atlantic?

In England, King James was a very unkind king. He wanted everybody to attend his church. Many people refused to do so, and the king said he would put them in prison and burn their homes. Some families fled to Holland.

The Pilgrims didn't stay long in Holland. They did not want their children to become like the Dutch children, so they decided to come to America.

A little band of about 100 set out in a small, weather-beaten boat called the Mayflower. After a stormy voyage the wanderers landed at Plymouth Rock on December 21, 1620.

The winter was very cold and the men set to work to build log cabins. Many of the people were taken sick and died during the long and cruel winter. Capt. Miles Standish and Priscilla Molines, a pretty young girl, helped to care for those who were sick.

The Pilgrims found strange people living here called Indians. Some of them were very cruel and tried to kill the white people. The Pilgrims were afraid of these Indians and carried guns when they went to church. There were, however, some friendly Indians. Among these were Squanto, Samoset and Massasoit.

When spring came, the Pilgrims planted corn and the Indians showed them how to take care of it. In the fall they had a fine harvest. So happy were the people and so filled with thankfulness to God that they decided to have a great feast. The Pilgrims invited the Indians who had been so kind to them, and Massasoit and 90 of his men came.

With the Indians as guests of honor about tables loaded with fish, game, wild fruit, cornbread and vegetables from their new gardens, the Pilgrims celebrated their first American harvest festival in October, 1621, by giving thanks to God for what He had done for them.

Each year we follow this custom of the Pilgrims and have Thanksgiving Day. This holiday is always the last Thursday in November.

Thanksgiving.

The last Thursday of November,
Can't you boys and girls remember?
Comes the nicest kind of day.
I know you can guess what I'm about to say.
Thanksgiving is that day of thanks.
To me Thanksgiving is first in rank.
To Him give thanks for the preceding year—
To praise, be thankful, and give good cheer.
Think not of Thanksgiving as a day "to eat,"
And be kind to those whom we meet.
Help some one that is in need,
Which is a very worthy deed.
So, boys and girls, bear this in mind:
To all through the year be kind—
To praise this wonderful day of the year
And be cheerful, obedient and sincere.

What Thanksgiving Means To Me.

Thanksgiving gives us or, at least, gives me the feeling of rejoicing at this season of the year. Remember the Pilgrims coming to this country and just think how you would have felt when you landed in a free land if it had been you, after going through so many hardships. If it had not been for the Pilgrims probably there would be no Thanksgiving today, so you see why you should rejoice at this season.

The Pilgrims trusted in God and they progressed in most everything they did or went about doing. God will help you also in any hardships you come across if you only trust in Him and ask His help.

I will repeat again, Thanksgiving is a day of rejoicing not in having a good time so much as in trusting and worshiping God.

VIRGINIA STEEN (age 13).

Thanksgiving.

(Awarded $1.)

On October, 1621, the first autumn the Pilgrims spent in America, they celebrtaed their first American harvest festival. The Indians were guests of honor and they sat around tables loaded with fish and game, wild fruits and cornbread and vegetables.

The next year the festival was filled with misfortunes, and so the colonists held no feast. Then a terrible drought came which withered all the corn and burned the gardens. The Pilgrims then had a day of special prayer which was followed by a long rain. At the same time a ship with supplies and old friends was seen on the seas. On account of this the governor put aside a day for "public thanksgiving."

Even though we have read of "Thanksgiving Days," with fasts and feasts, it was not until 1636 that we can find a record of a celebration as we keep today. Then the colonists of the Plymouth colony, "in the meeting house, beginning about half an hour before 9 and continued until after 12 o'clock," with singing, sermon and prayer.

During the Revolutionary War the Continental Congress appointed December 18, 1776, to be kept as a Thanksgiving Day in remembrance of the surrender of Burgoyne.

In the first year President Washington was in office he recommended that November 26, 1789, be kept as a day of national thanksgiving for the establishment of a kind of Government that made for safety and happiness.

The festival for years was almost a New England holiday, but slowly it became national. In 1864 President Lincoln set aside the last Thursday in November as a day for national thanksgiving. Since then each President has set aside this day as a national festival.

THE JUNIOR POST AIRSHIP

"I hope we get back early," said the pilot, as he tuned up the airship for the weekly tour of the world to gather news for the readers of The Junior Post of what is going on all over the world. "My nephew and niece are coming home from college today for the Thanksgiving vacation and we have plans for lots of festivities in their honor."

"I want to be back early, too," said the editor, "for my son has returned from college and my daughter from preparatory school with some friends. Young people seem to have such a good time in Washington at Thanksgiving holiday time."

"Yes, and other times, too," agreed the pilot. "My sister has invited a whole house party of young people for the inauguration. I feel that every boy, girl, young man and woman should see at least one inauguration in their lives just to see how solemn is the ceremony that makes one man the President of the United States with the responsibility of government on his shoulders."

"You are very right, young man," replied the editor, turning to admire the clean-cut fine young American face of his pilot. "I really feel that no one could possibly take that oath of office administered by the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court in the presence of great statesmen and people of our Nation and representatives of foreign governments and high prelates of all the religious creeds without being inspired to do his best for the government and the people that they could. Any man in the White House does do his very best, I am sure of that."

"I think that, too," said the pilot, as they flew over the White House and saw through one of the office windows President Hoover gravely conferring with Democrats and Republicans alike on the serious foreign debt situation on which so much of the future prosperity and recovery of this Nation depend.

"I always like to see women in Red Cross uniforms," declared the editor as they flew over the handsome National American Red Cross Building with the District of Columbia Chapter Memorial Building to Women in the World War adjacent to it and saw a group of Red Cross workers in uniforms starting out for their hours of volunteer work to relieve suffering in this peace-time stressful world. "All my family join the Red Cross every year and lots of good each dollar does, too. Do you know that the Red Cross has given flour enough to feed 20,000,000 people. And we certainly should be happy to know about the clothing they are giving to the destitute this year. The women of my family are helping to sew on these garments. All the boys and girls are gathering up buttons, hooks and eyes, tape and such 'findings' as members of the Junior Red Cross."

"Great work," said the pilot. "My sister and her children do a lot of work for it, too."

"That is a busy group of people down there at that meeting," said the editor. "Oh, yes, I recognize some of them. They must be workers for the Community Chest. That is a splendid institution. I do not know what our local charities and relief organizations would do without it. Our people are such generous givers, even in hard times, if they are made to realize the necessity for their aid in the efficient manner these splendid men and women are able to present to them."

The airship took a turn about North Carolina to view the nearly completed memorial at Kitty Hawk, where the Wright brothers made their first successful flight in a heavier-than-air machine which today we call an airplane.

They flew up the coast to New York and arrived just in time to see the arrival of the cruiser Karlsruhe, of the German navy, the first German battleship to visit the harbor since 1917, when the United States' part in the World War began.

Across the ocean they flew to London, where they looked down on the barracks which house the women marchers of the unemployed army, eating in a mess hall in military fashion much as the famous women war service army ate during the World War. They were just in time to see the unemployed men and women marching in the streets of London, kept orderly by the English "Bobbies," as they call their policemen mounted on horses.

As they soared over France they saw the president, M. Le Brun, striding along in the forests with a group of gentlemen, his guests at a hunting party, as a recreation from the affairs of state and international debt situation, which is worrying him as much as it is our own President.

Holidays Ahead Big Inspiration to Join Movement

Ho, members of the Knighthood of Youth! Ye boys and girls enlisted in the great crusade for good deeds, good habits, good health and good will toward everybody, gather together to make this winter a real banner one for the Knighthood of Youth in Washington, and everywhere The Washington Post and the Knighthood of Youth page are read, that is, all over the United States and in foreign lands too.

What a privilege it is for the boys and girls who belong to the Knighthood of Youth to have that invisible bond of friendship and understanding with all the thousands of other members in this city and all over the world who are endeavoring to live their lives in a knightly way so that they will grow up to be fine men and women and show a good example to all mankind in their crusade for good health, good deeds, good habits and good will toward every one.

With Christmas and a brand-new year just around the corner, there is a real inspiration for the Knighthood of Youth. The greatest Knight who ever lived in all the world was that tiny baby Knight who was born so many centuries ago in far-off Bethlehem, whose birth we celebrate with peace on earth and good will to men on Christmas Day.

Then we must all be ready for our New Year's crusade to enter the bright, clean, brand-new year with our knightly banners floating and ready to live up to all the rules of the organization.

Those of you who are not members of the Knighthood, boy and girl readers up to 12 years of age, readers of The Junior Post and Knighthood page, cut out the recruiter's blank on this page and send it in to the Knighthood of Youth headquarters, in The Washington Post Building.

Good Loser Wins Since He Achieves Victory for Self

Be a good loser. A true knight is always courageous, courteous and fine in the face of defeat as well as victory. We can not always win. If you are striving for the right, however, remember that right will always triumph in the end. If you feel that your side is right and that it has lost, do not change your allegiance, but keep on fighting for victory.

Of course, in play, a game, your side may lose sometimes. Then, if you are generous and true of heart as a knight should be you will be wholehearted in your admiration for the skill of the other side and be spurred on to make your own game and those with whom you play better.

A good loser always wins a victory because he wins a victory with himself. Do not let the defeats of life sour you. Let them aid in developing your character and your power of endurance. People who always have things their own way you will find when you grow up to be men and women have their own way at the expense of other people. A good, clean, honest defeat is much better than victory which is not won by a careful keeping of all the rules of the game and fair play. A person or group of persons, boys or girls, who win a victory through unfair methods, really suffer the worst defeat that human beings can suffer. They have defeated their own character, progress and sense of fair play and their right to look everybody in the eye.

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"Father read us the nicest story about the books that the men who have been President of the United States read when they were young and the ones that remained favorites with them all their lives," said Blanche as she hurried along with Alice and Pearl to meet the Story Book Lady and the members of the Knighthood of Youth and The Junior Post Writers' Club for the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land. "It was so interesting."

"I guess it was," said William, who joined the girls in time to hear Blanche's remark. "I guess what they read when they were young had a lot to do with the kind of men they become, the kind of men fit to be President of the United States. I hope we can find some books today to tell us what all the Presidents did when they were boys. I like to read about them."

"Well," said the Story Book Lady as she listened to what the boys and girls had to say about Presidents and elections and what they read when they were boys, "the publishers know what Young America wants and we are sure to find some books along this line in Story Book Land today. We will keep a sharp lookout for them."

"Good morning," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land.

"Good morning," answered the Story Book Lady and the members of the Knighthood of Youth and The Junior Post Writers' Club in a chorus.

Mr. Gnome flew to open wide the gate for the Story Book Lady and her young companions to pass, assisted by his three grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick, who all stood in a row with their grandfather, Mr. Gnome, and took off their green hats with scarlet feathers on them and made deep, low bows.

"Oh," shouted Little Lillian in great excitement, "just see the Story Book Fairy and Merry and Jolly, the Story Book Fairy children, are riding today on the backs of Thanksgiving turkeys instead of in airplanes."

"Of course, we are!" said the Story Book Fairy, as she flew out of the Fairy Tale Forest, followed by Merry and Jolly, all on Thanksgiving turkeys. The Queen is fond of her turkeys and thought they might like some exercise. Some of us are flying about on Goosey Gander, and Mr. Gander whom Mother Goose rides when she wants to fly through the air, and a very fine gander it is, too, as you can tell by reading your nursery rhymes."

"Well," said Little Lillian, "I guess they all are Thanksgiving turkeys, too, but if the Queen is so fond of them you never will have turkey for Thanksgiving dinner."

"Let's not discuss it," said the Story Book Fairy as the turkeys on which she and the Story Book Fairy children fluttered about a bit as though they did not like the conversation.

"Here we are," said William, as they entered into the heart of Story Book Land. "The Story Book Lady was right; the publishers knew we would want to read about Presidents, with the election just over. Can we get down this book street?"

"Of course we can," said the Story Book Lady, leading the way and putting on her magic glasses. "So many nice-looking boys, and how polite they are, too. Polite little boys get to be great men. Let me see. It is called, 'Boys Who Became President,' by William Heylinger (Thomas Nelson & Sons, New York)."

"This is indeed a nice book and you can all see what the boys looked like and pictures of what they did and where they lived from the nice illustrations by Leslie Thomas."

"There is George Washington; I knew him right away," said Jack. "He is riding that untamed colt we read about in our school books."

"And there is Teddy Roosevelt taking boxing lessons," said Marshall.

"And Andy Jackson defying a British officer," said Anne. "Oh, this is, indeed, a nice book, and we all must read it."

"I hope you read about me, too," said a pretty little girl in the dress of Revolutionary days at the end of a book street. "I lived in very exciting times."

"Of course, we will," said the Story Book Lady, leading the way to a book street and smiling at the pretty little girl. "Let me see. Where are my magic glasses? It is called 'A Little Maid of Lexington,' by Alice Turner Curtis (The Penn Publishing Co., Philadelphia). This is Mary Farley, 12 years old, and she has met John Hancock, who signed the Declaration in such large hand writing, and Samuel Adams and others whom you read about in your American histories. Just read this book and find out what an important part she played in the Revolution. And look at the pictures drawn by Hattie Longstreet Price."

Thanksgiving Day.

When the New England colonists came to America they had many hardships to endure. They could hardly keep up existence here during their first winter, in 1620. After their first harvest, in 1621, they invited the Indians and had a huge feast, giving thanks to God for keeping them safely through the previous winter.

In 1623 Gov. Bradley made provision for a day of thanksgiving and prayer. Once during a drought the prayers and fasting of the people brought rain. Gradually the custom prevailed of appointing Thanksgiving Day directly after the harvest by the proclamation of the New England governors. During the Revolution a day of national thanksgiving was recognized by Congress. Gradually the States adopted the custom. In 1864 President Lincoln appointed a day of Thanksgiving and Presidents since, have designated the last Thursday in November as the set day.

Today we celebrate Thanksgiving but not in the same spirit as of the Pilgrims. They were truly in earnest thanking God for keeping them safely through their first winter here, in the "New World," and although their trials were hard the pathway seemed brighter and more successful ahead.

LET'S PLAY WITH YOUR STEAM ENGINE, SKEEZIX.

GEE, SPUD, I'LL HAVE TO FIND IT FIRST.

I BET THEY HID MY STEAM ENGINE UP HERE AFTER CORKY AN' I HAD A SCRAP OVER IT.

RACHEL, WAS THERE ANY OF THAT PUDDING LEFT WE HAD LAST NIGHT?

YES'M THEY WAS, BUT THEY AIN'T ANY MORE. CHOC'LUT DON'T KEEP SO WELL AROUND HERE.

SKEEZIX, YOU'RE NOT SUPPOSED TO GO UP INTO THAT ATTIC, AND LOOK WHAT YOU'VE DONE! IT'S GOING TO COST ME A LOT OF MONEY TO GET THAT PLASTERED UP AND THE CEILING PAINTED.

A BOARD TIPPED.

I DIDN'T KNOW THEY WAS SO MUCH PLASTA COME DOWN AS FEELS LIKE IS IN MY EYES.

YOU DID GET PLENTY, DIDN'T YOU.

YOU TAKE CARE OF YOUR EYES, RACHEL, AND I'LL FINISH GETTING LUNCH.

SKEEZIX! YOU TORE YOUR STOCKING!

TOO BAD. NOW IT WON'T COVER UP MY SKINNED KNEE.

MY LAND! YOU DID SKIN IT DIDN'T YOU!

EE-YOW! AUNTIE BLOSSOM, THAT SMARTS.

CORKY! DON'T YOU EAT THAT PLASTER. THAT'LL DRY UP YOUR BLOOD

LET THAT BE A LESSON TO YOU, YOUNG MAN. JUST SEE ALL THE THINGS THAT HAVE HAPPENED FROM ONE CASE OF DISOBEDIENCE— RUINED CEILING, RACHEL'S EYES, AUNTIE BLOSSOM COOKING, TORN STOCKING, SKINNED KNEE—

YES SIR.

AND THAT ISN'T ALL! THERE'S PLASTER IN MY SOUP!

THAT PHONEY NICKEL

DICK BUYS A NICKEL'S WORTH OF CANDY WITH THE PHONEY NICKEL

AMOS BUYS A NICKEL'S WORTH OF CANDY AT THE SAME PLACE GETS THE PHONEY NICKEL IN CHANGE. HE NOW HAS THE CANDY AND THE ORIGINAL PHONEY. WHO LOSES AND WHO WINS?

THIS IS AN OLD SNAPSHOT OF ONE OF PAT PATTON'S EARLY LOVES WHEN BOTH SHE AND PAT WERE THIRD GRADERS.

WELL, TEXIE WE CAN REST EASY AT LAST - LOOK AT THIS PAPER.

HERE'S A REPORT FROM THE HOSPITAL - "WOUNDED DETECTIVE SUFFERS RELAPSE. BELIEVE END IS NEAR. BULLET FROM GUN FIRED BY WAIF IS CAUSE."

WELL - I GUESS THAT FINISHES OFF THE FLATFOOT AND ANDS OUR WORRIES.

STICK 'EM UP, DAN MUCELLI — AND YOU TOO - TEXIE GARCIA!

I PHONED THAT STORY TO THE NEWSPAPERS MYSELF KNOWING IT WOULD THROW YOU OFF YOUR GUARD. I'M FEELIN' GREAT — GREAT ENOUGH TO PULL DOWN THE CURTAIN ON YOU, DAN. GIVE ME YOUR GUN!

HEY, WHAT ARE YOU FIRING MY ROD INTO THAT PILLOW FOR?

SHUT UP, AND KEEP YOUR HANDS UP!

I JUST WANTED TO GET THE BULLET THAT THIS GUN SHOOTS AND COMPARE IT WITH THIS ONE THE DOC TOOK OUT OF MY HIP.

DAN, DID YOU EVER HEAR OF THE TERM "BALLISTICS"?

NO! WHAT'S HAT?

IT'S THE TRICK OF DISCOVERING WHICH GUN A BULLET CAME FROM BY COMPARING THE MARKINGS MADE ON THE PIECE OF LEAD BY THE INSIDE OF THE GUN BARRELL.

THAT BULLET THAT ENTERED MY BODY CAME FROM YOUR GUN!

YOU LIE!

NOW, MARCH OUT OF THAT DOOR, YOU TWO. WE'RE GOING DOWN TO HEADQUARTERS.

WHILE AT THE BOYS WARD WHERE JUNIOR IS BEING HELD.....

HE JUST LIES THERE, MR. PATTON. FOR THREE DAYS NOW HE HASN EATEN. HE KEEPS MUMBLING THAT HE DIDN'T FIRE THE GUN.

CHIEF - THINGS ARE IN AN AWFUL MESS - I CALLED THE HOSPITAL AND THEY SAID TRACY DISAPPEARED FROM HIS ROOM ABOUT TWO HOURS AGO WHILE THE NURSE WAS IN THE HALL AND THEY DON'T KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT THAT NEWSPAPER STORY -- AND JUNIOR — WELL - THE LITTLE TYKE IS ALMOST OUT OF HIS HEAD!

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS

By JOHN HIX

John Bull's most celebrated contribution to music—the well known tune to which "My Country 'Tis of Thee" is sung—became the national anthem of four European countries as well as the famous American patriotic song.

In Great Britain the national anthem "God Save the King," is sung to the same music. Germany's national anthem, "Heil dir im Siegeskranz," before the revolution, was Balthazar Gerhard Schumacher's words set to the same music. In Switzerland the "Ruft du, mein Vaterland," has Bull's noted air as the music, and in Denmark, "Heil dir, dem Liebenden" has the identical tune. Although America's "My Country 'Tis of Thee" was long a contender with "The Star Spangled Banner" as this nation's unofficial national anthem, the latter piece has since been officially named the national anthem.

More people throughout the world stand uncovered at the playing of the little known John Bull's music than at the music of any of the famous masters.

Unimportant and forgotten for years, the little island of Sarah Ann in the Pacific ocean has suddenly become of interest to two nations and to astronomers the world over—but Sarah Ann cannot be located. The tiny island — according to charts that once purported to show its location—will be in the path of a total eclipse of the sun of June 8, 1937. The island, however, is now among the missing.

The Pacific fleet of the United States navy has been asked to search for the island. Germany, also, has expressed interest in the island's location. So far as is known Sarah Ann is the only place in the world where the eclipse may be seen from land—that is, if Sarah Ann can be found.
